

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Friday, May 20, 1994

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O gracious God, as You have blessed every person with the full measure of Your grace and given unto us all the bounty of Your spirit, so lead us this day in the ways of peace. We pray for peace in our hearts that we will be freed from selfishness or covetousness or envy, that we will replace any enmity with goodwill, any hatred with charity, so we may lead lives of generosity and kindness. May there be peace in our world so the weapons of destruction will become the tools of construction, that the nations will sense their shared destiny in a new spirit of hope and trust, one with another. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HEFLEY] come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. HEFLEY led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

CONDOLENCES TO THE FRIENDS AND FAMILY OF JACQUELINE KENNEDY ONASSIS

(Mr. FOLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I join with Members of the House of Representatives, on both sides of the aisle in extending our deepest condolences to the friends and family of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis.

In 1963, Jacqueline Kennedy's steadfast strength and courage, perhaps more than anything else during that fateful week, led this Nation through a tragic episode in American history. Over the years, her dignity in crisis became a symbol of our national character; and her elegance and style changed the look of America.

Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis combined intellectualism with social tradition—professionalism with style and grace—and created, perhaps ahead of her time, a standard for contemporary American women.

Few people have such a profound impact on their time as did Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis. Her dignity, elegance, and courage are forever etched in our collective memory as part of a unique period in American history that reflected the best of what we are as a nation, and who we are as a people. Generations to come will remember her as a standard of American culture and character.

Mr. Speaker, I believe I speak for every Member of this House when I say that we join the Nation in mourning Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, and remembering what she meant to this Nation.

NINETY-SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF THE CREATION OF THE REPUBLIC OF CUBA

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, on this date 92 years ago, the Republic of Cuba was created, after a century long struggle, marked by the courage and determination of Cuban patriots who sacrificed all for liberty and democracy.

Sadly, the Cuban people today find themselves struggling once again against the forces of oppression. Only this time, not against an imperialist foreign power, but against the totalitarian dictator who betrayed his country, and has enslaved the Cuban nation for 35 years, Fidel Castro.

The Castro regime's repression of the Cuban people continues unabated after many decades. However, the patriotic spirit of Jose Marti, Antonio Maceo, Maximo Gomez, and all the other Cuban patriots who fought for Cuban independence, remains alive in the hearts and souls of all Cubans, both inside and outside the island, who still struggle for the liberation of Cuba from the claws of Castro's ruthless regime.

Mr. Speaker, that fighting spirit will soon define the end of the Castro dictatorship and signal a new dawn of freedom and democracy for the sovereign nation of Cuba and its people.

FAIR TREATMENT FOR THE U.S. CAPITOL POLICE FORCE

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, the Capitol Police are one of the finest police communities in the entire Nation, yet they get no respect from the Congress of the United States. They are paid thousands of dollars less than other Federal employees. Their grievances are thrown in the wastebasket. They say there is age discrimination, racial discrimination, and sexual harassment, and no one really cares. They believe the Speaker does not care and the leaders of the Congress do not care.

In fact, it costs $50,000 just to train 1 police officer, and the Capitol Police are so fed up, in the last 60 days 40 Capitol Police officers left the force and said, "We are sick and tired of being treated like second-rate citizens." Shame, Congress. The only time the Capitol Police think they are getting a fair shake is when Congress has a police emergency. They want us to co-sponsor House Concurrent Resolution 84, and Congress, we deserve to at least give our Capitol Police some support.

IN THE PASSING OF JACQUELINE KENNEDY ONASSIS, CAMELOT HAS LOST ITS GUINEVERE

(Mr. BILBRAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, in the early 1960's I was asked as a student at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, to be the head of the student for Kennedy in southern Nevada. I was so proud that I was asked to do this as an active member of the Young Democrats, and I worked very, very hard. Even though I cannot consider myself a knight in Camelot, I certainly considered myself a squire or maybe only a page, but I worked very, very hard in that election to get then-Senator Kennedy elected President.

For the next 3 years I watched in awe, in admiration, as the Kennedy administration moved forward on many programs that I as a Democrat held so near and dear. We certainly admired President Kennedy and his wife, Jacqueline Kennedy, and were happy to see the progress of this administration. We were happy when they coined the name Camelot, because again, we felt we were part of that noble cause to bring their justice to all mankind and America in general.

We lost that ray of light last night when Jacqueline Kennedy died, and we will remember her forever. That light has gone out, and we feel so bad about it, but her memory will go on forever. We have certainly lost our fair Guinevere.

URGING DEMOCRATIC FRESHMEN A-Z COSPONSORS TO SIGN THE A-Z DISCHARGE PETITION

(Mr. ZELIFF asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ZELIFF. Mr. Speaker, in 1992 the voters told us loud and clear that they wanted change. They brought new blood to Congress and new blood to the White House.

Last year, 112 new Members came to this House: 112 freshmen were sent here with a voter mandate for change; 112 freshmen campaigned against Congress; 112 freshmen pledged to end business as usual.

All 44 freshman Republicans have cosponsored the A-Z cut-spending bill, and all have signed the A-Z discharge petition. Twenty-four freshman Democrats are cosponsors, but only one took the heroic step of signing the discharge petition.

The American people are tired of the same old excuses about why Washington can't cut spending. The American people know that low taxes come from low spending.

The American people know that there is Government waste. The American people are willing to accept some sacrifice.

A-Z ends business as usual. A-Z brings fiscal responsibility to Congress. A-Z makes Congress accountable to the people, but most importantly, A-Z fulfills the 1992 voter mandate for change.

I urge the 24 Democratic freshmen who cosponsored A-Z to join all 45 of their Republican freshmen colleagues. End the hypocrisy now. Sign the A-Z discharge petition today.

You promised the voters change. The American people are waiting and watching.

A SOLUTION TO THE HAITIAN PROBLEM

(Mr. GOSS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, the President has not ruled out an invasion of Haiti. Sanctions are going to take effect there tomorrow. The clock is ticking, the deadlines are upon us. We have an outpouring of refugees coming out of that country into the waters of the Caribbean like we have not seen in more than 3 years. The country is in grinding poverty. It is described as a public health disaster by recent visitors. It is an environmental and it is a human calamity.

Mr. Speaker, there is a solution. Under OAS and U.N. auspices, a safe haven in Haiti on Haitian soil for humanitarian relief and as a base for Aristide loyalists can be found in the Ile de la Gonave right here close to the Haitian mainland. That is a 280-square-mile island, it has over 80,000 people on it, it has very few military and it is virtually totally defensible against any military invasions from Port-au-Prince because they have no capability to go across the water. One Coast Guard cutter, no invasion, the OAS and the United Nations, we can begin to restore humanity and democracy in Haiti.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S BIZARRE HAITIAN POLICY

(Mr. MICA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, each chapter of this administration's policy toward Haiti is more and more bizarre.

As a Congressman from Florida, I keep thinking it cannot get any worse.

Floridians have footed the bill for illegal Haitians, legal Haitians, HIV-infected Haitians, economic refugee Haitians, and asylum-seeking Haitians.

The Florida taxpayer has picked up the tab for failed Federal policy, changed Federal policy, and no Federal policy.

To underwrite this nightmare the people of Florida have anted up for welfare, food stamps, education, housing, incarceration, transportation, and hospitalization.

Now, most outrageously, Floridians and United States taxpayers will pay thousands of their hard-earned dollars to charter foreign cruise ships to process the new flood of Haitians at sea.

While we debate mothballing our navy, the White House is paying for foreign cruise ships. What further insult can we add to an already injured American taxpayer?

FIGHTING VIOLENT CRIME SHOULD BE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT'S NO. 1 PRIORITY

(Mr. SCHIFF asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Speaker, earlier this year the President of the United States placed a great deal of emphasis on the fight against violent crime. I think the President is entirely correct to place that priority.

Unfortunately though, the administration's budget proposal for the Department of Justice does not adequately reflect that priority. Quite the contrary.

The administration proposes reductions in the staffing of the DEA, of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, of the criminal division of the Department of Justice and of the criminal prosecutors in the U.S. Attorney's Office. At the same time, the administration proposes to increase the number of personnel in the antitrust division of the Department of Justice.

Of course, I have no objection to prosecuting antitrust violators too, but the President did not say publicly that that was our priority.

I invite Members of the House from both sides of the aisle to join me in a letter to the Appropriations Committee asking them to make the priority in the budget for the Department of Justice fighting violent crime. This letter will be sent next week.

CONDOLENCES TO THE FAMILY OF JACQUELINE KENNEDY ONASSIS

(Mr. MAZZOLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, words which are always associated with the late Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis are style, elegance and grace, and intelligence, and indeed, Mrs. Kennedy Onassis did exhibit all of those traits admirably through her public life, and then in more recent years in her private life.

But there is another word that could be associated with her and should be, and that is the word "courage." She showed estimable courage in 1963 when many of us watched on television as she organized and presided over the funeral of her husband, the assassinated President of our land. She also showed courage in recent months when she fought her lymphoma with nobility.

Ultimately it succeeded in killing her, but I think all of us can learn from the lessons which she and her family have taught us, and we take this opportunity to extend condolences to the children, to the grandchildren and to the family.

TEACH CAPITALISM HERE IN THE UNITED STATES

(Mr. STEARNS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, having had the privilege to hear the Prime Minister of India speak before Congress 2 days ago, we should all take a moment to reflect on how this country can best take advantage of the opportunities opening up throughout the world.

As the free market struggles to take hold in many countries like India that formerly relied on state-dominated economies, the United States has an opportunity to serve as the great academy of the free market.

Rather than spend billions on foreign assistance projects of dubious merit, Congress can help to establish programs in our local communities that bring young entrepreneurs and business leaders to this country to learn first-hand how a large market economy functions.

Some programs such as these already exist, and I believe that Congress should seek to expand these in the years to come. This would be one important step in moving our international policies from aid to trade. It would also enable us to cut substantially our foreign aid budget, establish trade ties with emerging markets and support market-oriented democracy throughout the world.

BREAST CANCER AND SCIENTIFIC FRAUD

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise to confront a killer of American women and a federal system which allowed women to be duped.

Some 46,300 women will die of breast cancer this year. It robs Americans of our mothers, our sisters, and our daughters.

American women were recently appalled to learn of scientific fraud conducted in one of the largest federally funded breast cancer research projects.

It is highly offensive that a trusted researcher would falsify data to get around the specific protocols designed to ensure appropriate and worthwhile information.

What is worse in this situation, however, is that the National Cancer Institute knowingly conceal this information from thousands of women whose potential life and death decisions were based on this false information.

It is time that we, as the guardians of the public trust, fully investigate and take action to ensure that women will never again be faced with treatment decisions based on false information. It is time to restore American women's confidence in the research they have entrusted to us.

OUTRAGEOUS BONUSES AWARDED BY SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

(Mr. EWING asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EWING. Mr. Speaker, the huge bonuses awarded by the Social Security agency are outrageous to taxpayers in central Illinois.

$32 million in bonuses from an agency with the track record of the Social Security Administration would certainly lead many American voters to be skeptical.

Some of these bonuses appear to be greedy and excessive.

Many of us find this hard to believe when the Clinton administration rolls into town bemoaning the greed and excesses of the past two administrations.

Yet, the largest single bonus went to a Clinton administration appointee, Lawrence Thompson, the second ranking agency executive, was on the job less than 3 months when he got a $9,256 bonus.

This is another example of how the Clinton administration wants it both ways.

They are asking the American people to believe they are cleaning up the mess in Washington, DC, when they are really part of the problem.

MOURNING THE DEATH OF JACQUELINE KENNEDY ONASSIS

(Mr. LEWIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with a deep sense of sadness and sorrow over the passing of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis. Our prayers are with her children, her grandchildren, and other members of her family.

Many of us came of age when this beautiful and gifted woman and President Kennedy held the attention of a hopeful nation. In Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, we had the most gracious First Lady to occupy the White House in modern times. She was the epitome of grace, charm, intellect, and beauty. Anyone who can remember the week of November 22, 1963, cannot forget how she led us through that difficult period following the assassination of President Kennedy.

Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis represented the very best of America. She was a source of inspiration to millions of Americans. For many of us, her passing means the loss of a dear and special friend.

Mrs. Onassis was always charming and generous. She was a great supporter of the arts and historic preservation. Many historic buildings in New York City, Washington, DC, and all around the country are standing because of her tireless efforts.

Mrs. Onassis will be missed by millions of Americans. Her passing is a great loss.

NEW TECHNOLOGIES TO IDENTIFY WELFARE CHEATS

(Mr. LAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAZIO. Mr. Speaker, this week a woman in New York was arrested and charged with welfare fraud. Not an unusual circumstance in itself, but investigators found that over a 7-year period this woman collected benefits she was not entitled to using at least 15 different fake ID's, each with her real photograph on the front and each entitling her to public assistance. In 1991, the woman was using eight different names at once and claiming 46 children—all fictitious. Between 1987 and 1993 she received a total of $450,000 in illegal benefits, making this possibly the largest case of welfare fraud in New York's history.

Earlier this year, I introduced H.R. 3723, calling upon the Secretary of HHS to conduct a feasibility study on the use of biometric technology as a means to identify welfare applicants and prevent just such incidents.

New York and California are conducting experimental programs on a limited basis using finger-imaging to identify welfare cheats. If the New York program is expanded statewide, it could save the taxpayers $46 million a year. Governor Cuomo has called for the expansion of this project. California projects a $20 million savings in its program over 5 years.

Reducing welfare fraud will cut costs and ensure that this assistance goes to those who honestly need help, not those who cheat the system and the taxpayers.

I urge my colleagues to join the 64 bipartisan cosponsors who have already signed onto H.R. 3727.

IN MEMORY OF JACQUELINE KENNEDY ONASSIS

(Mr. LEVIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, the death of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis evokes flashes of memory, first and foremost November 22 and its aftermath, her grace, her dignity, her strength.

But as we watched television last night and this morning, my wife and I, there were also memories of those days before November 22, their excitement, their sense of decency, and their sense of the worthiness of public service. Some might call those memories illusion. I would call them hope.

May that hope not pass on with Jackie Kennedy; instead, may it be rekindled.

TRIBUTE TO A GREAT LADY

(Mr. ENGEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to a great lady who passed away last night in my hometown of New York. I mean, of course, our former First Lady, Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis.

To those of us growing up in the 1960's, Jacqueline Kennedy, along with her husband, President John F. Kennedy, personified a new generation of energy, spirit, and hope. Indeed, my very first calling to become involved in politics and government was in great part inspired by the Kennedys.

To me, Jacqueline Kennedy represented a kind of royalty in America, in a good sense. She was truly queen of our country during the short period she served as First Lady.

Who could ever forget her televised tour of the White House or her pillbox hats or the Jackie Kennedy hairdos? Who could ever forget the dignity and grace with which she conducted herself during the terrible period after the assassination?

I had the pleasure of meeting Jacqueline Kennedy only once, in 1980, when she came to my home community in the Bronx to campaign with me for TED KENNEDY. I did not know what to expect, but found her charming, personable, and gracious.

In her later years, she was very much a part of the New York City spirit, involving herself in a number of causes. We were very proud that Jacqueline Kennedy, born in New York, chose New York City for her home.

She will truly be missed but never forgotten. And my condolences go out to her children, grandchildren, and all of her family.

PROVIDING FOR EXPANDED DEBATE TIME FOR CERTAIN AMENDMENTS TO H.R. 4301, NATIONAL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1995

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that during further consideration of H.R. 4301 in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union pursuant to House Resolution 429, debate time for amendments Nos. 16, 17, and 18 printed in part 1 of House Report 103-509 be expanded from 10 minutes per amendment, equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a Member opposed, to 20 minutes per amendment, equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a Member opposed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BILBRAY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1995

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 429 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 4301.

□ 1027

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for further consideration of the bill (H.R. 4301) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1995 for military activities of the Department of Defense, to prescribe military personnel strengths for fiscal year 1995, and for other purposes, with Mr. RAHALL (Chairman pro tempore) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Thursday, May 19, 1994, amendment No. 2 printed in part 3 of House Report 103-509 offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] had been disposed of.

Pursuant to House Resolution 429, it is now in order to debate the subject matter of the Trident II D-5 missile.

The gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] will be recognized for 10 minutes and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPENCE] will be recognized for 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS].

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this is a general debate that would govern the discussion of two amendments, one amendment offered by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY], and another amendment offered by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS].

In my capacity as chair of the Committee on Armed Services, I would like to make a few comments regarding both; first, with respect to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS], relating to Trident backfit.

First, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the Dicks amendment would give the Secretary of Defense the authority to waive the bill's prohibition on backfitting the D-5 missiles into the first eight Trident submarines if the Secretary determines that foregoing the backfit would result in a significant risk to U.S. national security.

Mr. Chairman, let me give you some brief background. The committee recommended prohibiting the retrofit of the Trident II D-5 missiles into eight Trident submarines stationed in the Pacific and now carrying the Trident I C-4 missile. At one time the navy had planned to outfit those submarines with newer, more accurate D-5 missiles, but the end of the cold war, the tighter fiscal constraints have caused the Navy to postpone its plans for backfit.

Although the Navy officially would like to reserve the right to backfit eight Pacific Tridents at some point after year 2000, it has neither planned, Mr. Chairman, nor budgeted for that eventuality.

□ 1030

On the contrary, the Navy is beginning to plan the budget costs associated with the alternative backfit. That is extending the life of the C-4 missile. The committee recommendation would thus prohibit the activity that is not currently part of the Navy's plan. Let me just make a few bullet points to support the committee position in the hopes that my colleagues would follow the lead of the committee and oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS].

First, the prohibition on backfitting D-5 missiles into C-4 submarines merely codifies current Navy plans.

Second, current Navy inventory objective for D-5 missiles does not, Mr. Chairman, does not include enough missiles to backfit the eight Trident C-4 submarines based at Bangor, WA.

Three, the Dicks amendment essentially renders the backfit prohibition in the bill meaningless by giving the Secretary of Defense the authority to waive the prohibition on the basis of national security. We do not need to postpone this decision any longer, Mr. Chairman. The cold war is over. The cold war is over.

Fourth point: Postponing a clear up-or-down decision on the backfit undermines the ability of the administration to plan a procurement strategy for the buyout of the D-5 missile and to plan for extending the service life of the C-4 missiles.

The greater range, payload, and accuracy of the D-5 missiles is no longer required in the post-cold-war era, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee.

By the Navy's own recent estimates, the alternative to backfit—that is, extending the service life of the C-4 missiles already deployed—is expected to be significantly less expensive than conducting the backfit. Mr. Chairman, the administration has no money in this bill, fiscal year 1995, to deal with these purposes. But the House Committee on Armed Services stepped up to this issue and established this prohibition.

Now, we spent hours and days and weeks and months debating how to intelligently and rationally handle our fiduciary responsibilities, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the taxpayers' dollars. By the action of the House, the Armed Services Committee canceling the backfit would save at least $3 billion in a post-cold-war environment.

How can we do less, Mr. Chairman? We do not have adequate resources to address myriad human problems that need to be dealt with by the Congress of the United States on behalf of the American people. Why do we need to put into motion the potential of backfitting a D-5 highly accurate cold war weapon when the cold war is over, potentially to the tune of $3 billion? The Navy has not budgeted for it, the Navy has not planned for it, and I would suggest that my colleagues follow the leadership of the Armed Services Committee, reject this amendment.

In the few moments I have remaining, let me speak very briefly to the amendment that will be offered by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY], who would terminate the D-5 warhead.

Several quick points: In a post-cold-war environment, the reduction in the nuclear threat justifies a smaller Trident D-5 force structure. As we approach the nuclear nonproliferation negotiations, we must take actions that are consistent with that, and purchase of new D-5 sends the message to the nonnuclear weapons nations that we are inconsistent on our approach to this issue. How can we say to other nations, "Don't cross the nuclear threshold and begin to acquire, develop and acquire heinous nuclear weapons," when we continue to pursue accurate warheads that serve no useful purpose but to endanger the lives of our children and our children's children?

Our national security interests are best served by reduction of weapons in Russia and a strong nonproliferation regime. Making an additional Trident D-5 buy at this time when we are building to a level which is more than sufficient for our defense purposes threatens to trigger military acquisition programs in Russia and in other countries.

We have a window of opportunity to shut down the old arms race, Mr. Chairman, to prevent a new one from emerging. Continuing to buy the D-5 thwarts that goal. We will save $3 billion in scarce resources if we adopt the amendment to end the D-5 acquisition.

Halting the D-5 procurement now would fit in with our arms control on the START-I and the START-II regimes to reduce the strategic nuclear warheads down to some 3,500.

Finally, we have an adequate number of D-5 missiles, 348, over 6 years of procurement to handle the 10 Trident submarines that are scheduled to be fitted with the D-5 and to meet any testing needs.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, we ask that you oppose the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS], on the grounds that I have already enumerated. We can save the resources, the cold war is over, we need to send the appropriate message.

I would ask my colleagues to join me in supporting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY] because that also saves resources; at a time when we are downsizing our military budget in a scarce-dollar environment, we need to be rational and thoughtful.

The post-cold-war challenges us to think anew. Let us not continue to carry the baggage of cold war thinking into this new debate. Old paradigms no longer work.

With those remarks and observations, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of a program that is critical to our national security, the Trident-II, D-5 sea-launched ballistic missile program. Specifically, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY] terminating production of the D-5 missile in fiscal year 1995. I also rise in support, however, of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] to give the Secretary of Defense the authority to waive the bill's prohibition on backfitting the D-5 missile into the first eight Trident submarines if the Secretary determines that foregoing the backfit would result in a significant risk to national security.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of a program that is critical to U.S. national security, the Trident II (D-5) sea-launched ballistic missile (SLBM). Specifically, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by Mr. PENNY terminating production of the D-5 in fiscal year 1995. I also rise in support, however, of the amendment offered by Mr. DICKS to give the Secretary of Defense the authority to waive the bill's prohibition on backfitting the D-5 missile into the first eight Trident submarines if the Secretary determines that foregoing the backfit would result in a significant risk to U.S. national security.

Mr. Chairman, under the START I and II arms reduction treaties, the United States is required to dramatically reduce the number of strategic warheads in its arsenal. The administration has decided to place the bulk of the remaining U.S. warheads in the stabilizing and more survivable submarine leg of the strategic triad. Relying more heavily on SLBM's requires the United States to produce enough D-5 missiles to equip the 10 Atlantic Ocean strategic submarines configured to carry the D-5. In pursuit of this objective, DOD has requested the funds necessary to procure an additional 18 D-5 missiles in fiscal year 1995.

Terminating D-5 missile production now would force a choice between two equally undesirable options: Send submarines to sea with empty launch tubes, or conduct costly modifications to the new Atlantic Ocean Trident submarines so as to permit them to employ the aging and less capable C-4 missile whose service life is limited—an option that could end up costing more than procuring the additional D-5 missiles. Either option will impose severe operational disadvantages and will create substantial inefficiencies in the overall U.S. strategic program.

Terminating D-5 production would also complicate U.S. arms control efforts. In fact, the Clinton administration strongly opposes any effort to reopen either START treaty to amendments—as would be required if the Penny amendment were to become law. As President Clinton noted in a letter dated May 18, 1994:

During debate on the fiscal year 1995 DOD authorization bill, Representative Penny will offer an amendment to terminate procurement of Trident missiles in fiscal year 1995. I strongly oppose this amendment. Terminating procurement of additional D-5 missiles would severely limit our ability to support the U.S. Trident SSBN program, which is the backbone of the U.S. deterrent well into the next century. It would also close our last remaining missile production line and adversely affect our support for Britain's Trident program. For these reasons, I urge Members to vote against the Penny amendment.

Here's what the former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs Gen. Colin Powell said about the D-5 missile in a July 27, 1993, letter:

The D-5 missile on Trident submarines will be the backbone of U.S. strategic deterrent forces under START II. I do not support the proposal to renegotiate the terms of the START II Treaty with Russia to allow either country to decrease the number of missiles carried by a submarine. I believe that production of the D-5 should not be prematurely terminated. The vast majority of the Trident investment is behind us, and procuring the remaining missiles for Atlantic Ocean Trident submarines will ensure a credible deterrent force well into the 21st century.

Former Secretary of Defense Les Aspin also strongly opposes the Penny amendment. According to a July 19, 1993, letter I received from Secretary Aspin:

Terminating D-5 missile production now would shut down the only operating strategic ballistic missile production line in the United States. Sustaining a low rate of D-5 production, and the associated industrial and technology bases, provides a key and unique hedge against future uncertainties. Continued D-5 production is, therefore, essential to the future health of our deterrent capability. I strongly urge your continued support for this critical program.

Mr. Chairman, for these reasons I strongly support the Trident II (D-5) missile program, and urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the Penny amendment and "yes" on the Dicks amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HANSEN].

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I think the first responsibility to the people and the Congress is to defend our people. All other things cannot come about if we cannot defend our people. How have we elected to do that over the years? During the days of the Soviet Union, we used something, either by happenstance or planned, and it was called the Triad: land, sea, and air. Little bit by little bit, the Triad system is being taken apart. We do not have strategic aircraft standing on alert. They are standing down. Little by little, we are pulling our missiles, like the MX and others, out of the ground. The MX will be out, we will have the Minuteman-III, that is all that we will have.

So why are we putting all our eggs in this basket? As we look at the three legs, we are deciding and electing to say that we are going to defend America with Trident boats and in these Trident boats, some in the Atlantic and some in the Pacific, those in the Pacific have an interim missile called the C-4. It is not intended to be a missile that will be longlasting. It does not have the range, it does not have the accuracy, it is not really the kind of missile we were looking for, because in this interim period we are waiting for the D-5 missiles.

We are asking now in the amendment of Mr. DICKS to put the D-5 in the Pacific fleet as it is in the Atlantic fleet. That is what we are looking at at this particular time.

Now, why at this time are we saying, "How do we defend America now?" Do we want to take the very best we have got and say, "No, we are going to use the old interim C-4?" It seems to me that as we lose our strategic B-52's, B-1, B-2, we are not using those to the extent we have, we are pulling our land-based missiles out; we do everything in our power to defend this Nation with the very best thing we have got, and that is the D-5. It seems to me totally unreasonable we would pull those out.

Also, let me add to this, we have our friends in the British Isles who are fitting their submarines and they are asking to do it with the D-5. To pull this program at this particular time, we cut off the legs of our friends, the British.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday a letter came from President Bill Clinton. If I may read part of that letter, it says,

During debate on the fiscal year 1995 DOD Authorization Bill, Representative Penny will offer an amendment to terminate procurement of Trident missiles in Fiscal Year 1995.

I strongly oppose this amendment. Terminating procurement of additional D-5 missiles would severely limit our ability to support the U.S. Trident SSBN program, which is the backbone of the U.S. deterrent well into the next century. It would also close our last remaining ballistic missile production line and adversely affect our support for Britain's Trident program.

For these reasons, I urge Members to vote against the Penny amendment.

□ 1040

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. I just want to make it very, very clear what my amendment does.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. RAHALL). The time of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HANSEN] has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. HANSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS].

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, what my amendment does is say this:

The Secretary of Defense is in the midst of a strategic review of all of our strategic forces. The committee has put in a prohibition on backfitting the D-5's on the Pacific Trident. I do not take that prohibition out unless the Secretary of Defense, who happens to be a Democrat, Bill Perry, wants to waive it because it is in the national security interest to waive it, and then we could still have the debate next year. There is not a dime in this bill for retrofitting D-5 missiles on Pacific Tridents. What I am doing is just preserving the option.

The other thing I would want to say to the gentleman on the D-5 missile is that the chairman says we have enough missiles to take care of the 10 Trident submarines. That simply is not accurate according to Admiral Childs who says we do not have the number of missiles for the 10 Tridents in the Atlantic. So, let us correct that record, and we have the President on our side, and the Defense Department on the side who wants to defeat the Penny amendment and support the D-5 Program.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's clarification of what his amendment does, and, as he points out, it gives it to the Secretary of Defense to make that determination. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, this is a very good amendment. I think we should support the Dicks amendment and oppose the Penny amendment.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I say to the gentleman, "Thank you."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SISISKY].

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Penny amendment to terminate production of the D-5 missile.

Mr. Chairman, we have almost completed our procurement of this program, and it would be premature to stop D-5 missile production now. The Trident submarine force constitutes the backbone of our strategic deterrent in this post-cold-war era. If we terminate D-5 missile production now, we will not have enough missiles to support even the reduced force levels agreed to under the START Treaties.

The D-5 Program is also a priority of the administration. Let me share with my colleagues a letter from the President of the United States in support of the D-5 Program that the Committee on Armed Services received just 2 days ago, and I might add parenthetically this is the only letter, as far as I know up to this point, that the President of the United States has written concerning the defense bill.

I quote:

I strongly oppose this amendment. Terminating procurement of additional D-5 missiles would severely limit our ability to support the U.S. Trident SSBN program, which is the backbone of the U.S. deterrent well into the next century. It would also close our last remaining ballistic missile production line and adversely affect our support for Britain's Trident program.

Mr. Chairman, I wholeheartedly agree with the President's statement, and will insert the President's letter in the record of debate on this amendment.

I would also like to emphasize that termination of the D-5 Program now would amount to a unilateral U.S. force reduction under the START Treaties since the United States would end up deploying fewer warheads than are permitted under START II. Such unilateral reductions would actually undermine START Treaty implementation by removing a key Russian incentive to ratify the START II Treaty.

Finally, termination of the D-5 Program now will adversely affect our confidence in the safety and reliability of the missile by causing an inventory shortfall that would in turn undermine the Navy's Planned Testing and Logistics Program.

For all of these reasons I strongly oppose the amendment to terminate D-5 production, and urge my colleagues to do the same.

The letter from the President is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 18, 1994.

Hon. RONALD V. DELLUMS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: During debate on the Fiscal Year 1995 DOD Authorization Bill, Representative Penny will offer an amendment to terminate procurement of Trident missiles in Fiscal Year 1995.

I strongly oppose this amendment. Terminating procurement of additional D-5 missiles would severely limit our ability to support the U.S. Trident SSBN program, which is the backbone of the U.S. deterrent well into the next century. It would also close our last remaining ballistic missile production line and adversely affect our support for Britain's Trident program.

For these reasons, I urge Members to vote against the Penny amendment.

Sincerely,

BILL.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Let me just say, and Yogi Berra once said, this is deja vu all over again. This debate could have occurred 10 years ago. As someone much brighter than this person, much more philosophical and brilliant said, everything is changed except the way we think, and what I am challenging my colleagues to do is to change the nature of how they think. The cold war is over. To talk about survivability and nuclear weapons is bizarre and absurd. We need to put that genie back in the bottle. This is the first opportunity we have as American people to try to make the world a safer place, and talking about building more nuclear weapons, in my estimation, flies in the face of reality.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the letter from our distinguished President, but I would remind all of our colleagues here that we are a coequal branch of government, and we have both the right and the responsibility to make decisions.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT].

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Chairman, today we will have an amendment on the floor which would terminate the D-5 missile, and that in my opinion would be a serious mistake. Let me just give the House an overview of where we are with this very important system.

We today have 10 Trident boats, 10 Trident submarines, which will be outfitted to accommodate the D-5 missile. We, therefore, need 240 D-5 missiles to go in the 24 tubes on each of these 10 submarines. That constitutes the requirement of 240 D-5 missiles if they are to be outfitted with the missiles for which they were designed.

Now one facile solution, which the supporters of this amendment may suggest, is we have got plenty of C-4 missiles, the older missile now on the existing Trident boat.

I ask, "Why don't we take them and simply stick them in the tubes of these 10 Trident submarines?"

The answer simply is: "They don't fit. Their length, their width, their total dimensions are such that they do not fit, and it would require that these boats be taken back to their manufacturer in Brighton, CT, and completely rebuilt at a cost of at least 400 or $500 million per boat, an exorbitant cost."

Second, in addition to the 240 missiles we need to fill the tubes on these ten Trident submarines, Mr. Chairman, we have a requirement still remaining of 11 missiles to be used for certification to make certain that this missile can perform according to its specifications. Thirty-five originally were required for this purpose. It is now down to 11 additional missiles. So, we need these for certification, and I might add that this is not some simple requirement because we have learned things from the testing and certification of this system that have been important to its development and deployment.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, we need 138 missiles for life cycle testing. Now what does this mean? We assume that the Trident boats will have a life of 23 years. They actually have a life of more than 23 years, but the utility of this missile we are assuming to be 23 years, and we are assuming that we will take six missiles every year and test. That means of the 10 boats 6 boats will be doing one test, one missile firing a year. That is the minimum necessary to keep proficiency in the crew so that they understand the flight system, the navigation system, the control system. It is the minimum test to make sure that we understand this system. It is also the minimum test to maintain confidence in the D-5 missile.

That means that about every other year a Trident submarine crew will be going to sea and firing one missile. That is what we are providing for here: 240 to go in the tubes, 138 to test, 11 to complete the certification. That brings us to 389 missiles. That has been pared back considerably from last year, and I think that point ought to be made.

We have already cut, the Navy has already cut, the request for the Trident missile, D-5 missile by 36 percent. It is down to 696 million from 1.1 billion. We have cut it to the minimum necessary number and should cut no further.

□ 1050

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. RAHALL). The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPENCE] has expired, and the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] has 1½ minutes remaining.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, it is my distinct pleasure to yield the balance of our time to our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY], who is the author of one of the two principal amendments before the House.

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Chairman, I—along with Congresswoman LYNN WOOLSEY of California, Congressman SCOTT KLUG and PETER BARCA of Wisconsin—are offering a bipartisan amendment to end procurement of the Trident II, D-5, missile after fiscal year 1994.

There are a number of very important reasons why this amendment should be approved by the House of Representatives at this time:

First, the Trident II, D-5, missile is a cold war weapon system which was designed to destroy hardened missile silos and other targets found only in the former Soviet Union. There is no national security argument which would necessitate the continued procurement of this weapon system.

A 1993 CBO report found that even if the United States ended the D-5 missile program after fiscal year 1994, the Navy would still have a Trident SLBM capability at the end of this decade which is comparable with the capability that exists today in the entire fleet of ballistic missile submarines.

This amendment would leave the Navy with nearly 320 D-5 missiles which have already been authorized by Congress. The authors of this amendment have proposed an option which provides 180 D-5 missiles on the 10 Trident II submarines and 140 D-5 missiles for tests and evaluations. This option would cancel the planned backfit of the Trident I submarines and would require the Navy to extend the life of the C-4 missile for an additional 15 years.

Continued procurement of the D-5 missile will likely lead to a hollow force in the near future unless steps are taken now to dramatically alter the way the Department of Defense spends its annual $260 billion budget.

Many of us in this body have criticized the President of the United States for the so-called hollow force—however, the real blame for a potential hollow force lies right here on Capitol Hill where many of us are more concerned about preserving Defense industry jobs in our districts, and less concerned about preserving national security in this country.

Expenditures on cold war weapon systems—like the D-5 missile—will contribute considerably to a military force which is heavy on expensive big ticket weapon systems and less heavy on personnel readiness and training. This imbalance is what all Members of Congress should be focusing on—not the overall level of military spending—which as we all know is 10 times the amount spent by all of our potential adversaries combined.

This amendment will save some $700 million in fiscal year 1995 and nearly $5 billion over the next 5 years, according to the Congressional Budget Office. The savings from this amendment would be available for personnel readiness and training—thereby avoiding a hollow force.

The proposed option advocated by the sponsors of this amendment—and endorsed by the Defense Budget Project—would allow the United States to deploy nearly 1,490 nuclear warheads at sea. Along with the 1,750 warheads to be deployed on land, the United States would deploy over 3,200 nuclear warheads under the START II Treaty—more than what the Russians are expected to deploy under the same treaty. Again, this amendment clearly does not affect the overall security of the United States.

Finally, for those on the Republican side of the aisle I would like to quote the words of former Assistant Secretary of Defense in the Reagan administration, Lawrence Korb. He recently said that "relics of the cold war like the D-5 missile survived the Bottom-Up Review even though the Soviet threat that brought about their development has gone away."

This amendment has been endorsed by the Defense Budget Project, Citizens Against Government Waste, the National Taxpayers Union, Council for a Livable World, Physicians for Social Responsibility, and many other groups.

While I understand that President Clinton is opposed to this amendment—and I respect the opinion of the President on national security issues—I and many Members of this House on both sides of the aisle believe that this amendment is the right thing to do at this time. I urge all Members to vote for the Penny-Woolsey-Klug-Barca amendment and against the Dicks amendment which would undercut the House Armed Services Committee position on the Trident backfit issue.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. All time has expired.

It is now in order to consider the amendments relating to the Trident II D-5 missile printed in Part 4 of House Report 103-509 which shall be considered in the following order: First, by Representative DICKS; and second, by Representative PENNY. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 1 printed in part 4 of House Report 103-509.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DICKS

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DICKS:
Page 19, line 4, insert "(a) LIMITATION.—" before "The Secretary of the Navy may not".

(b) WAIVER AUTHORITY.—If the Secretary of Defense determines that adherence to the prohibition in subsection (a) would result in a significant national security risk to the United States, the Secretary may waive that prohibition. Such a waiver may not take effect until the Secretary submits to Congress a certification of that determination and of the reasons for that determination.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] will be recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment, and the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] will be recognized for 5 minutes in opposition.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS].

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to urge the House to support my amendment to the fiscal year 1995 national defense authorization bill. Section 123 prohibits the backfit of the D-5 missile on the Trident submarines currently equipped with the C-4 missile. My amendment gives the Secretary of Defense the authority to waive this provision if he determines that backfitting is in the security interests of this Nation.

Last year, the reported bill included a similar provision. I offered an amendment on the floor of the House that recommended that the Secretary of Defense conduct a study comparing the option of the D-5 missile backfit with paying for a service life extension for the C-4 missile on Trident I submarines. The study will consider cost effectiveness, force structure requirements, and future strategic flexibility.

The House adopted, and the conferees agreed to this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, nothing has changed in the interim to suggest the House should reverse its position.

Simultaneously, the Department is conducting a strategic nuclear posture review for our national military strategy. Section 123 of H.R. 4301 would prevent the Secretary, and the Congress, from making an informed decision on all possible options from the ongoing nuclear posture review, and the Navy's study as mandated by the Congress.

Previously, the Navy has testified that it would make the decision regarding the backfit of the Trident I submarines no sooner than fiscal year 1996. I am advised that studies suggest that it may well be less costly to perform the backfit versus a service life extension plan.

Whether or not the study recommends the backfit or not, the Secretary must be allowed to finish this study in order to make an informed recommendation to the Congress on maintaining the viability of this important platform.

Pending the recommendations of the strategic nuclear posture review, the D-5 platform could provide potential survivability improvements as a hedge against any breakthrough of future anti-submarine warfare.

The prohibition to backfit the Trident I submarines with this missile could also drive decisions on overall Trident submarine force structure and force us to increased reliance on less survivable legs of the triad.

Furthermore, there is no funding requested in the budget for D-5 backfit and therefore there are no savings achieved by forcing the issue. If the Department opts to pursue this option it will have to request funding next year and the Congress will have ample opportunity to debate whether that funding ought to be provided.

My amendment, as last year, represents a compromise that would retain the section but provides the Secretary of Defense with the opportunity to waive its provisions if he certifies it is in our national security interests.

Admiral Chiles, CINC-Strategic Command, testified before the Senate Armed Services Committee on the importance to preserve all options associated with backfitting D-5 missiles or maintaining the present C-4 missiles, and "The Nuclear Posture Review is evaluating these precepts to ensure the TRIDENT force will remain a viable, save deterrent force for the future."

The Secretary must be allowed to finish this thorough review of our strategic forces as previously directed by the Congress. The Department of the Navy has advised me that "any legislative prohibition that might prematurely restrict any option would not be operationally prudent, and in terms of deterrence, such a prohibition would be counter-productive."

Granting the Secretary this waiver prevents any option from being precluded in the future readiness of the Trident submarine force.

I urge the House to support my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] has expired.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself my additional 3 minutes, the balance of my time, and I will yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] and the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HANSEN].

Mr. Chairman, first I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER].

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has made a very important point. The gentleman's amendment simply says that where the Secretary of Defense finds that there is "a significant national security risk" to the United States is not allowing backfitting of D-5, that can then take place. So it gives some discretion to the Secretary of Defense. He has to find a very high standard. He has to find that there is a significant national security risk.

We all know we have brought the Soviet Union to a dissolution point by being strong, by having the strong strategic triad that the gentleman from Utah spoke about. This part of the triad, our underwater dimension of the triad, is perhaps our strongest and our most survivable and in some cases our most important, and the D-5 is a very important part of that.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the comments of the gentleman from California, and I now yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HANSEN].

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think it would be very difficult to be the Secretary of Defense and have 435 junior Secretary of Defenses over here telling you what to do in every instance. In this particular instance all we are really trying to do is give some latitude to the Secretary, to give him the right to make a determination after he studies this and ask the question, is this the proper and correct thing to do?

I cannot see where anyone would want to oppose this. This is eminently fair to the gentleman over there. If we continue to put fences on him, we put hobbles on his legs and handcuffs on his arms, and I do not know how he can run the organization over there that way.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is an excellent amendment, and I support it.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the ranking minority member, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the gentleman's amendment and urge my colleagues to vote for it.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, we can debate this next year. It is premature this year. Let us give our good friend, Bill Perry, the distinguished Secretary of Defense, the opportunity to review our strategic weapons and then make a recommendation to the Congress. We can then look at it. We can look at it thoughtfully and carefully, and the gentleman's very elaborate arguments can be considered by the chairman and by the Secretary. But it is premature at this juncture, in my mind at least, to take away this option when we do not have any money in here and it does not involve any expenditure. So therefore, there is no savings.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] has 30 seconds remaining.

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS], is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, let me just say to my colleagues that I understand the argument. The point here is that when I said we are a coequal branch of government, there are times when the clarity of our own thought dictates that we take action.

It is my position that we have considered this matter. This prohibition, interestingly enough was in the House bill last year, though it was modified in conference, so this is not a new position that we are reasserting. We are trying to understand that we are sending messages, and we are part of the policymaking equation here. That is why we draw our checks every month. That is why we get paid, to step up and play hardball, make intelligent, rational, coherent, and cogent decisions.

I am simply saying that on this matter we have made a decision. If we were in an iffy position, if we were indecisive about this, then, fine, we could pass an amendment, do a study, and say we would come back and recommend. But on this matter there are many of us in this Chamber who believe that we are already clear about what we think the decision should be.

Mr. Chairman, let us save $3 billion of the taxpayers' money and not retrofit.

Mr. Chairman, it is my great pleasure to yield 1 minute to our distinguished colleague, the gentlewoman from California [Ms. WOOLSEY], who rises in opposition to the amendment.

□ 1100

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by Mr. DICKS. We should not agree to have the Pentagon waste money on a study, which will simply make the recommendation to waste more money in the future. Not only should we support the committee's position on the backfit, but we should terminate the program entirely. We cannot base this decision on local economic interests. We must do what's right for our entire country.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Dicks amendment. Language in the bill cancels the planned backfit of the eight Trident I submarines based in the State of Washington. That is the sort of tough decision we need to make in order to rationalize the defense budget in the post-cold-war era.

The Dicks amendment would undercut the committee's position. The Armed Services Committee has correctly questioned the necessity of spending billions of dollars at the end of this decade to reconfigure the Navy's eight Trident I submarines so that they can carry the larger D-5 missile. The fact is, this backfit is not necessary under any scenario in the post-cold-war era.

A 1993 Congressional Budget Office report estimated that the planned backfit of the Trident I submarines will cost some $2.6 billion. In addition, the 192 D-5 missiles which would need to be procured for deployment on the eight Trident I submarines would cost an additional $6 billion.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment—if passed—would allow the Navy to spend over $8.5 billion on the Trident program—above and beyond the amount that they will need to spend to outfit the 10 Trident II submarines with D-5 missiles. We simply cannot afford to give the Department of Defense the greenlight to go ahead with this wasteful and expensive program. I urge all Members to vote against the Dicks amendment.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. RAHALL). The gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] has 2½ minutes remaining.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, let me say to my distinguished colleague from Washington, Mr. DICKS, he is absolutely correct. Over the years, one of the highlights of this gentleman's service in the body has been to debate my colleague on a number of these issues. We have had an opportunity to stand together on some of these questions, and we have had an opportunity to stand apart and to debate substantively on this matter, and I appreciate that. We have always shown each other that level of mutual respect.

Let me just simply say to all of my colleagues on this particular item, this gentleman may not be right on this, but I believe to a moral certainty that these Trident submarines will never be retrofitted with the rest of these D-5 missiles. I do not believe that the Pentagon is going to spend $3 billion to retrofit. If I am correct, let us stop all this bantering around. This is wonderful great debate, but it is surreal discussion. It is in never-never land.

The military budget is going down. The stress on our national budget is increasing geometrically. And for anyone to think that in a post-cold-war era we are going to suddenly find $3 billion to take a D-5 missile that is a cold war weapon, a cold war weapon, and put it on Tridents, I think is taking a departure from reality. So I am saying if that is true, let us get on with it. Let us not keep adding amendments that will give a false sense of hope and direction. This $3 billion will never be spent on the D-5.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to take the opportunity to yield to my colleague and let him respond. I do not believe this money is ever going to be spent. We are not going to authorize it, they are not going to ask for it, and you folks are not going to appropriate it.

Mr. Chairman, I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. The study that is being done, by the way, is being done. There is a strategic posture review being done by the Secretary of Defense. As you recall, Mr. Chairman, last year the House adopted my amendment that said go do a study on the difference between retrofitting and fixing up the C-4 missiles, or backfitting. It may well be that backfitting is less expensive than doing the retrofit and fixing up the C-4 missile, and you would have a brandnew missile with 30 years of lifetime.

Now, the world is not quite as stable out there as some would assert. We still see what is going on in Russia with the rise of Mr. Zhirinovskiy and then problems there with stability. Let us let them do the study, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] has expired. The Chair would advise Members that the gentleman from California has the right to close debate.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I would indicate to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPENCE], that I would be pleased at the appropriate time to yield half of that time to my colleague.

Mr. Chairman, let me simply say, last year, the study; this year, another prolongation. I am simply saying, let us step up to it. We have thought about this matter. Let us end it.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, there is no money in the budget to do this, so it is really premature at this point. We are not going to save a cent. So do we not have the benefit of Secretary Perry's analysis before we make the ultimate decision? It is premature. That is all I am saying.

Mr. DELLUMS. If I might reclaim my time, I am simply saying we are a coequal branch of government. Let the Secretary of Defense benefit from the wisdom of this body. It is a two-way street. It is not a one-way communication here. Brilliance is not all invested in the Pentagon. There is brilliance and competence and capability and vision and wisdom in this body. Let them benefit from our wisdom.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield briefly, if you are so convinced on the merits and there is not one dime in the budget to do anything about it, why do you not wait and see what the Secretary of Defense thinks? If he agrees with you, he will never waive this provision. The only reason he would waive it is if there is some major change out there and he then says it is in our security interests. He must certify to that. Then the chairman still has the option of not authorizing the program, if he feels that the Secretary's certification is wrong.

All you are doing is giving him the option, Mr. Chairman. We are not going to save a nickel here.

Mr. DELLUMS. I think the gentleman has adequately made his point. Let us let the wisdom, or lack thereof, of the body make the judgment of who is correct.

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELLUMS. I yield to the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Chairman, in fairness, if the Secretary of Defense wants to come back in the next year and asks us to lift the waiver, we can lift it next year. Is that correct?

Mr. DELLUMS. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. DICKS. Let us give him the option this year. That is a long time away.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the House to support the Dicks amendment, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS].

The question was taken, and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. RAHALL). It is now in order to consider amendment 2 printed in part 4 of House Report 103-509.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PENNY

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PENNY: At the end of subtitle C of title I (page 19, after line 15), add the following new section:

SEC. 125. TERMINATION OF TRIDENT II (D-5) MISSILE PROCUREMENT.

(a) TERMINATION OF PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Defense shall terminate the Trident II (D-5) missile program upon the completion of procurement of the missiles for which funds were appropriated for fiscal year 1994.

(b) FUNDING RESTRICTION.—The amount provided in section 102 for procurement of weapons for the Navy is hereby reduced by $696,000,000. None of the funds made available to the Navy for a fiscal year after fiscal year 1994 may be obligated for the Trident II (D-5) missile program except as required for program termination costs.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY] will be recognized for 5 minutes and a Member opposed, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPENCE], will be recognized for 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. WOOLSEY].

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, the D-5 should have died years ago, much as the Berlin Wall came tumbling down. It serves no purpose other than to keep our defense costs high at a time when our domestic needs are growing. But Mr. Chairman, year after year, we see the D-5 in our defense bill. The D-5 clings to life because this Congress just does not get it on military spending.

Right now, the United States is spending more on the military than the next 10 countries combined. We are spending $400,000 each minute on the military. Military spending is out of control, and this Congress refuses to act.

Some of my colleagues will disagree. You will hear from them about how we are dangerously close to a hollow force, and we cannot support a two-war strategy.

I tell you, we are dangerously close to a hollow education system, a hollow health care system, and a hollow fight against crime. We cannot devise a strategy to fight these very real domestic wars, because Congress is fixated on two nonexistent wars abroad.

We already have 320 D-5 missiles. If you do not think that is enough of these powerful weapons of destruction, ask the group that has come together from all parts of the political spectrum to say, enough is enough. Republicans, Democrats, the National Taxpayers Union, the Council for a Livable World, Citizens Against Government Waste, and the Defense Budget Project, they all agree that continued production of the D-5 is wasteful and unnecessary.

When people talk about gridlock, when they talk of a Congress that will not listen, they are talking about the D-5. This year, let us listen for a change. Let us act for a change. Let us put this cold war relic where it belongs—in the history books.

Please vote in favor of the Penny-Woolsey-Klug-Barca amendment.

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to the total time remaining on each side?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY] has 3 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPENCE] has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. I usually vote to cut spending everywhere I can, but not when it hurts and does harm to our national security.

Mr. Chairman, I have been very critical of our President because I thought he has been cutting too much from our national defense. Even the President is opposed to this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have a letter from a commander of our Strategic Command, and I want to quote this much from it: "This will result in unilateral reductions below those negotiated by current arms control agreements."

Mr. Chairman, I include this letter and another letter from the President as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE,
U.S. STRATEGIC COMMAND,
May 19, 1994.

Hon. FLOYD D. SPENCE,
Ranking Minority Member, Committee on Armed Services, U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN SPENCE: The upcoming debate on the Fiscal Year 1995 Defense Authorization Bill will include an amendment to terminate procurement of the Trident II (D-5) missile. I would like to offer my thoughts regarding the Trident II submarine and continued procurement of D-5 missiles.

The Trident II submarine with its D-5 missile system will remain a critical element of this nation's future strategic force structure for many years. Terminating D-5 procurement in Fiscal Year 1995 will not provide sufficient missiles to outfit and support the ten Trident II submarines presently at sea or undergoing construction. Without a sufficient number of missiles to support loadout, testing and evaluation. Trident submarines would ultimately be deployed with fewer missiles onboard, a situation I consider not to be in our country's best interests. This will result in unilateral reductions below those negotiated by current arms control agreements. To offset this, we would have to load more warheads per existing missile which complicates treaty compliance and results in operational drawbacks in terms of platform survivability and efficient targeting.

Additionally, continuing Trident II missile production preserves our ballistic missile industrial base as this is the only strategic missile in production today. It would be a mistake to put existing older Trident I (C-4) missiles on our new Trident II submarines because C-4 re-engineering costs would nearly equal D-5 procurement costs, and this would result in our strategic submarines carrying an older, less capable missile. Also, D-5 production allows support for Britain's strategic program.

For these reasons, I conclude that funding the President's Fiscal Year 1995 budget proposal for Trident II missile procurement is essential to the U.S. strategic deterrent capability. I ask for your support of this critical program.

Very respectfully,

H.G. CHILES, Jr.,
Admiral, U.S. Navy,
Commander in Chief.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, DC, May 18, 1994.

Hon. RONALD V. DELLUMS,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: During debate on the Fiscal Year 1995 DOD Authorization Bill, Representative Penny will offer an amendment to terminate procurement of Trident missiles in Fiscal Year 1995.

I strongly oppose this amendment. Terminating procurement of additional D-5 missiles would severely limit our ability to support the U.S. Trident SSBN program, which is the backbone of the U.S. deterrent well into the next century. It would also close our last remaining ballistic missile production line and adversely affect our support for Britain's Trident program.

For these reasons, I urge Members to vote against the Penny amendment.

Sincerely,

BILL CLINTON.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER].

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, deterrents are important. Strategic deterrents are important. We have survived and been able to keep the world in a reasonably stable state for the last 40 years because we had a deterrent that was comprised of land, sea and air forces. Defense spending is dropping off the shelf.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is a massive cut in defense spending. We are cutting across the board bomber forces, fighter forces, we are cashing in 1,700 young people a week out of the military. We have one remaining strong survivable part of the strategic triad and that is the undersea part. That is the part that is difficult for any potential adversaries to detect and that has the capability of striking at military targets.

Mr. Chairman, the D-5 missile is the centerpiece of accurate missiles that can be fired out of submarines that can hit military targets. We still have a very dangerous world. The President and the Secretary of Defense have asked to have this remaining part of the strategic triad kept alive by this House of Representatives.

Mr. Chairman, we should at this point keep this option open for the President, keep this option open for the Secretary of Defense. The Soviet Union is not cutting back its submarine program at this time. Vote "no" on Penny.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS].

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to urge the House to oppose the Penny amendment to eliminate the D-5 missile production after 1994.

Mr. Chairman, here we are again, on the floor of the House, debating this same argument as last year. But Mr. Chairman, the arguments against Mr. PENNY's amendment are also the same. If anything, world events have taken a turn for the worse.

Tens of thousands of nuclear weapons continue to be deployed in the former Soviet Union.

The political future of the New Republics is not cast in stone, and recent developments in Russia are not encouraging.

While the United States has deactivated more than 90 percent of the START I required reductions in the number of warheads on ballistic missile systems, the former Soviet Union has deactivated less than 30 percent of the forces that must be eliminated under the terms of START I.

These reductions, Mr. Chairman, are primarily a result of the dismantlement efforts by Kazakhstan, Belarus, and the Ukraine, to comply with United States requests in order to receive United States aid.

START I has not been ratified, much less START II.

And yet, the Russians are currently developing, and plan to deploy, three new ballistic missiles within the next 10 years: a road mobile, single RV, as well as a silo-based single RV, and a follow on missile for the Typhoon class ballistic missile submarine.

We do not know if they plan to deploy these capabilities or sell them to the highest bidder.

Admiral Chiles, CINC-Strategic Command states:

The Trident II submarine with its D-5 missile system will remain a critical element of this Nation's future strategic force structure for many years. Terminating D-5 procurement in fiscal year 1995 will not provide sufficient missiles to outfit and support the 10 Trident II submarines presently at sea or undergoing construction * * * the funding for the President's fiscal year 1995 budget proposal for Trident II missile procurement is essential to the U.S. strategic deterrent capability.

Mr. Chairman, these are many of the same arguments that we raised last year in opposition to the amendment to terminate the D-5.

Nonetheless, the United States still continues to downsize its strategic nuclear force structure. Under START II, the peacekeeper, small ICBM and Minuteman II ICBM's are eliminated. We are buying only 15 percent of the B-2 bombers originally programmed, the SRAM II program has been cancelled and Cruise missile carrying B-52's retired. We are scrapping all Poseidon submarines. The Trident submarine program is at 18 and the W-88 warhead terminated.

The Trident submarine force will be even more critical as the lowest cost and the most survivable leg of the strategic deterrent. In addition, the D-5 is the only strategic missile still under production.

The assertion that the Navy already has enough D-5 missiles for deployment is incorrect. Last year, President Clinton stated "even at the lowest Trident levels that remain under review pursuant to the bottom up review, additional D-5 missile procurement are required in FY 1994 and 1995."

This administration strongly supports this program. The President, in his letter to Chairman DELLUMS, conveyed his strong opposition to this amendment:

Terminating procurement of additional D-5 missiles would severely limit our ability to support the U.S. Trident SSBN program, which is the backbone of the U.S. deterrent well into the next century.

In his letter, the President urges Members to "vote against the Penny amendment."

We cannot afford to lose this capability.

Recognizing the world events over the last year, I strongly urge the House to support the President and vote "no" on the Penny amendment.

□ 1140

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BARCIA].

Mr. BARCIA of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Penny amendment.

During this era of tight defense budgets, and a transformed international environment, it is increasingly necessary to prioritize the programs upon which the Department of Defense spends its money.

We have an opportunity here to do just that. In this era of decreased world tensions the continued procurement of this weapons system is an imprudent expenditure of our scarce defense resources. As is well known the Navy has already procured 320 D-5 missiles, and continues to maintain operational its C-4 missiles.

As is evident, the majority of the threats to our present security cannot be addressed by nuclear weapons. Conflicts such as the war in Bosnia, or peacekeeping operations, and even the tensions now on the Korean peninsula can not be solved by nuclear weapons. I question how the continued purchase of a weapons system, which will slightly increase the accuracy and range of nuclear warheads, will increase our national security.

The benefits of this improvement are marginal, and do not return enough on the necessary investment. By voting for this amendment we can save $700 million in fiscal year 1995 alone. Let us take a small step toward fiscal prudence and vote for this amendment.

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BARCA].

Mr. BARCA of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, and Members, this amendment stops procurement of the D-5 missile after fiscal year 1994, leaving the Navy with 320 D-5 missiles to deploy on the 10 Trident II submarines and maintain 140 more for testing.

This amendment would save over $700 million and about $5 billion over the next 5 years.

Now, we talked in this body time and time again about being serious about the deficit, about being serious about our national debt, and that has to extend across all programs including unnecessary defense programs.

This D-5 missile was designed specifically for hardened targets in the former Soviet Union, and even former Assistant Secretary of Defense under the Reagan administration Lawrence Korb has stated this is a relic of the past, one that we can do without.

We can no longer afford this. Let us vote "yes" on this amendment.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PENNY. Under the rule, is it the right of the opposition to close on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the committee position, the gentleman is correct, that the gentleman from South Carolina has the right to close debate.

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KLUG].

Mr. KLUG. Mr. Chairman, let us begin with an idea from zero-based budgeting, which simply says the beginning of each year you should reassess the cost of each program and its fundamental mission, and let us make it clear the original mission of the D-5, as my colleague from Wisconsin says, is to penetrate hardened targets such as missile silos in the only place those targets exist in the world today, which is in the former Soviet Union.

We have difficult decisions to make as we decide to make cuts in both defense and domestic spending, and it seems to me for those of us on the Republican side of the aisle as we face tougher and tougher cuts and fewer and fewer dollars to spend on defense, that we need to spend them on the best places to defend the United States in a very dangerous world. Those are more likely to be regional conflicts. They are not likely to be nuclear exchanges.

We are 1 year farther out from the cold war than we were last year. Today's amendment allows 25 more missiles than the amendment which failed last year, and let me remind everybody in this room, we are $255 billion deeper in debt than we were at the start of this year.

This amendment will save $700 million next year and $5 billion over the next 5 years. We still give the United States Navy 320 missiles to deploy at sea against the only hardened target we can find in the world, in the former Soviet Union.

I understand the administration is opposed to this amendment, but let me remind my Republican colleagues that this is the same administration that is opposed to the A-to-Z proposal, it is the same administration that is opposed to the balanced budget amendment, it is the same administration that is opposed to the line-item veto, and the same administration that was opposed to the Penny-Kasich budget cuts of last year.

We in this room have begun to make some very difficult decisions about defense cuts in the years ahead. If we want to invest it in training and we want to invest it in manpower, as my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER], pointed out, if we want to invest in U.S. strategic defense interests in a very dangerous world, then spend the money where we need to spend the money, not in a cold war relic that no longer has a mission.

I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on the Penny-Klug amendment.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT].

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Chairman, the proponents of this amendment want to cut strategic weapons, and as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] and others have pointed out, we have already cut strategic weapons. We are in the midst of the biggest downsizing of strategic weaponry since the end of the Second World War. Bombers are being cut back drastically. Cruise missiles at sea have been cut out totally. We are coming down to the point where this system, the D-5 system, is the centerpiece of our triad.

Fifty percent of our deterrent will depend upon the D-5 missile in the years to come as a result of START 1 and START 2.

The proponents of this amendment also say they want to cut the budget. They say $5 billion. I count the out-year requirements for this system at less than $2 billion, but that is still a lot of money.

The Navy has already taken the budget in earnest, and they have cut this program from $1.1 billion last year to $696 million this year. They are asking for the bare minimum.

We have got 255 D-5 missiles already on hand. The Navy says they need 134 more. Why do we need 389 D-5 missiles? First of all, we have got to complete the certification of it. If 50 percent of our deterrent is going to depend on the D-5 missile, we want to make sure it is certified to do what we think it can do.

Second, we need 138 to test, and that is a modest 6 missiles each boat every other year, which will fire 1 missile over the next 23 years. Every missile system, every system we have had has had this provision for testing in it; 138 to test, 11 more for certification; and we need 240 missiles just to deploy.

Ten boats are outfitted for the D-5 missile. They have 24 tubes.

If this passes, some of those boats are going to sea with empty tubes, empty-handed, partially loaded, doing less than they can do on patrol and having less than we provided for ourselves in the START 2 provisions in the treaty that we made with the former Soviet Union.

This amendment should be defeated for all of those reasons, and there is one more reason. This is the last ballistic missile line that we have open in the United States. Lockheed missiles in space, the best in the business, but it is the last line that we have. Close this and we have no production base left in the ballistic missile business, and we should not do it for that reason alone, but there are strategic reasons to vote down this amendment.

Stay with the Navy's program, which has been pared to the minimum already.

□ 1150

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. RAHALL). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] for 5 minutes.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this is an important debate; this is an extraordinarily important debate for two reasons. It has strategic implications, it has budgetary implications.

I would like to speak to both and speak specifically to those Members of this body who have not made up their minds. First, with respect to the strategic issue: Members of the committee, as I have stated on more than one occasion, to the point of redundancy, the cold war is over, Mr. Chairman. We are in a new era. The Berlin Wall is down. The cold war is over, we are in uncharted waters. We are in unprecedented times, and we now have to think, and think in very radically different ways, Mr. Chairman.

Many of us came here concerned about the expense, the danger, and even the insanity of the arms race. And now with change that has come with incredible speed, with awesome implications, we now have a marvelous window of opportunity, Mr. Chairman. And that window of opportunity is to stop the old arms race. All of us on both sides of the aisle are preoccupied and concerned with the danger of nuclear proliferation in the world. But we are leaders on this.

Do you realize what message we are communicating to the world when we continue to walk down the road of nuclear madness and we can stand in the well talking about "strategic this" and "strategic that?" The cold war is over, Mr. Chairman. Who are we pointing these weapons at?

There is no longer a Soviet Union. There is no longer a Warsaw Pact; and we all know that even if the former Soviet Union attempted to turn the corner and head back to the old days, we are talking 10, 12, and 15 years down the road, we have all kinds of time to come back to that insanity if we wish. But my hope is that we march forward into the 21st century.

This D-5 missile is a relic. We can end the old arms race so we do not trigger a new one so that we do not communicate to the world that there is a need for us to move down this road.

Mr. Chairman, if you look at the cornerstone of the Pentagon's doctrine based on the Bottom-Up Review, is this preoccupation with nuclear weapons and the former Soviet Union? No. Two major regional conflicts. Do we anticipate firing nuclear weapons at Third World countries, Mr. Chairman? We do not. We have achieved a level of madness here that has to be challenged. We have got to reject old thinking. We have this one brief opportunity to change the world in profoundly radical ways.

Mr. Chairman, to those who are budget conservatives, let me say to all of you here: My distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY], has been one of the most consistent human beings here in these Chambers, arguing for fiscal accountability, arguing to address ourselves responsibly to our fiduciary function with respect to the taxpayers' dollars. If we cannot adopt this amendment, where can we cut? No one in this room contemplates or believes we are going to fight a nuclear war. The fact of the matter is we ought to be walking dramatically and powerfully away from that notion. We can say, based on all of the figures enunciated here—some have said $2.1 billion, some have said $5 billion; take your pick, two or five—that is a hell of a lot of money, Mr. Chairman.

We spend time in these Chambers debating over cutting $5 million and $10 million; we cannot even listen to each other on an amendment that deals with between $2 billion and $5 billion, when there is human misery all over this country that we cannot find money to spend to deal with these miseries.

Here, with the D-5 missile, let's reject the past, walk forward into the future, save the American taxpayers' money, protect our children and our children's children from an insane arms race that serves no useful purpose but to spend their money and endanger their lives.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. LaFalce for, with Mr. Emerson against.

Mr. Sawyer for, with Mr. Grams against.

Mr. Becerra for, with Mr. Kolbe against.

Mr. Washington for, with Mr. McCollum against.

Mr. Rangel for, with Mr. Dingell against.

Mr. Miller of California for, with Mr. Thomas of California against.

Messrs. GALLEGLY, LIGHTFOOT, and McDADE changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. ROSE changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Chairman, I was unfortunately detained while chairing a hearing in the Rayburn House Office Building and thus missed rollcall vote No. 189, on the Penny amendment to terminate funding for the Trident D-5 missile. Had I made it to the floor time, I would have voted "aye."

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. RAHALL). Pursuant to the order of the House of Wednesday, May 18, 1994, it is now in order to consider any amendment printed in part 1 of the report not previously considered.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 16 printed in part 1 of the House Report 103-509.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. KENNEDY

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KENNEDY: At the end of title X (page 277, after line 2), insert the following new section:

SEC. 1038. PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS TO OPERATE ARMY SCHOOL OF THE AMERICAS.

Funds appropriated or otherwise made available to the Department of Defense pursuant to an authorization of appropriations contained in this Act may not be used to operate the Army School of the Americas, currently at Fort Benning, Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of earlier today, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] will be recognized for 10 minutes, and a Member opposed, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON], will be recognized for 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the United States has a long history of involvement in Latin American affairs. As a bastion of democracy with a vibrant economy, the United States is looked to with great admiration and respect by millions and millions of Latin Americans.

But our history in Latin America is checkered by our financial, military, and moral support and association with people like Omar Torrijos, the dictator of Panama; Manuel Noriega, the dictator and drug runner; Leopoldo Galtieri, who led the military junta in Argentina; Roberto d'Aubisson, organizer of the Salvadoran death squads that killed Archbishop Romero; 19 of the 26 Salvadoran officers that planned and carried out and covered up the murder of 6 Jesuit priests in 1989; and more than 100 of the 246 Colombian officers cited for human rights violations, including several instructors from the School of the Americas, as well as 6 Peruvian officers linked to a military death squad that killed 9 students in 1992, and the 3 most senior Guatemalan officers who backed a coup attempt in May 1993.

What is the one thing that they all had in common?

They are all graduates of the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

The fact is that this is a school that has run more dictators than any other school in the history of the world. They boast about the fact that 10 separate heads of state throughout Latin America were graduates of the School of the Americas. Not one of them was elected through a democratic election, and in many cases they actually overthrew the civilian governments that brought them into power.

They tell us now that the school is changing, but we know and understand, Mr. Chairman, that the school is continuing the kind of modus operandi that left us with the legacy of being associated with some of the worst human rights abusers on the face of this planet.

□ 1220

We see just on the House steps, Father Ray Bourgeois, who has gone on a hunger strike for 40 days, to demonstrate his personal commitment and the commitment of millions of others that our association with the school ought to end. Let us stop the days of the cold war, let us stop our history with these associations, and let us get on to a new day with the association of the United States and Latin America through peaceful means, not military ones.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose this amendment. It is illogical. There is simply no cause-effect relationship between the problem and the proposed solution to kill the School of the Americas. The School of the Americas does teach the law of war and respect for human rights. The fact that this instruction does not sink into every participant during this span of course of several weeks' length should not surprise us. There are Americans who have attended seminary courses and then become murderers. You do not blame the seminaries for that.

I am hearing that some graduates of the school become dictators. It is also true General Somoza, the late dictator of Guatemala, was a graduate of West Point. Did we close West Point down at that point?

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BISHOP].

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to provide the House of Representatives with factual information regarding the School of the Americas at Fort Benning, GA.

The school was established in 1963 under President John F. Kennedy's Alliance for Progress from the existing U.S. Army Caribbean Training Center in Panama. In 1984, the school was moved from Panama to Fort Benning, GA. Since 1963, more than 58,000 Latin American soldiers have graduated from the School of the Americas.

The school was developed to train and teach Latin American militaries how to defend against subversion techniques from the Soviet Union and Cuba. However, as the cold war began to end, the School of the Americas began to adopt a new curriculum. The new emphasis began to focus on the role of military professionalism in a democratic government. The guiding principle of the school now is to provide professional service subordinate to civilian control by democratically elected governments. Training at the school is focused on effective response to drug trafficking, natural disasters, and respect for human rights.

Instruction is conducted in Spanish to allow for others outside the English-speaking upper class to attend; however, approximately 122 out of 160 instructors are from the United States. Claims that instruction is extensively carried out by foreign trainers is absolutely false. The fact that classes are taught in Spanish has substantially reduced the cost of training and allowed a uniquely diverse population to attend the school.

The curriculum at the School of the Americas undergoes constant review not only by the Army's Training and Doctrine Command but also by a new outside policy review board which has recently been established to ensure that human rights awareness is an integral part of training.

Have there been bad apples at the school? Yes. However, many of the so-called bad apples attended the school before it was located at Fort Benning, GA. For example, Gen. Manuel Noriega attended the school in its early inception in Panama during the mid-1960's. He did not attend the school of the Americas at Fort Benning, GA. Another thug routinely recognized by critics of the school is Gen. Domingo Monterrosa of El Salvador. General Monterrosa, now deceased, has been linked to the death squads which plagued El Salvador in the early 1980's during the country's bloody civil war. However, General Monterrosa also did not attend the School of the Americas at Fort Benning. He spent 2 weeks at the school when it was located in Panama in 1966. Was General Monterrosa trained to be a human rights violator during this time? No. He spent the entire 2 weeks learning to pack a parachute.

I submit to you that the school has improved dramatically over the years and has responded to the changing world by taking a hard look at itself and making a strong effort to address those areas in need of improvement. In fact, President Ronald Reagan's decision to move the school to Fort Benning has proven to be an excellent decision. Because the press has spent hours upon hours detailing the few bad apples of the past, I want to spend a few moments detailing the successes of the present.

José Gallardo Román, current Minister of Defense in Ecuador, is one of the School of the Americas' true all-stars. General Gallardo strongly supports democratic principles and the need to respect human rights. In 1993, he signed an accord with the Latin American Association on Human Rights to begin a sweeping human rights training program throughout the Armed Forces.

Another all-star is Gen. Hernán José Guzmán, Army Commander in Colombia. General Guzmán has initiated measures to prevent human rights abuses such as assigning judges to brigades involved in counterinsurgency operations. These judges accompany the brigades on operations and ensure that insurgents' human rights are protected.

Minister Román and General Guzmán represent the school's all-stars in the realm of human rights. The School of the Americas has also had true success stories in the name of democracy and defeating anti-democratic coups.

Brig. Gen. Fuget Borregales, the current director of operations of the Venezuelan Army and graduate of the school, was a major player in defeating coup attempts in Caracas in November 1992. His unit recaptured the La Carlota Air Base which had been overrun by coup rebels.

Another success story involves the current commander of the 4th Infantry Division in Venezuela and School of the Americas graduate, Brig. Gen. Pedro Valencia Vivas. General Vivas identified officers who had participated in the February 4, 1992, coup attempt. When the November 28, 1992, coup occurred, not a single platoon under his command participated in the attempt to overthrow the democratic government.

I have detailed these gentlemen because they represent the overwhelming graduates of the School of the Americas who are currently playing a constructive role in Latin America. The critics of the school detail past graduates who did not receive training at Fort Benning and are no longer players in Latin America.

I have received a number of letters from Veterans' service organizations supporting the School of the Americas. At this time I would like to read portions of those letters to you for the record.

Ret. Vice Adm. T.J. Kilcline, president of the Retired Officers Association writes:

The impact of the school has truly been significant. Not only has the education been most helpful for our Latin American neighbors, but the contact with Americans and the positive attitudes of the American military personnel they met and got to know while at Benning was the basis for friendship and understanding between individuals which translates to better relationships among our countries.

Ret. Army Gen. Roger Sandler, executive director of the Reserve Officers Association of the United States, writes "I am well aware of this outstanding school's very important contributions to democracy in our hemisphere."

Mr. Chairman, our veterans support the School of the Americas at Fort Benning. At this time I would like to enter into the RECORD a resolution by the American Ex-Prisoners of War specifically supporting the school's continued operation and opposing the effort to eliminate the school's funding.

RESOLUTION SUPPORTING THE U.S. ARMY SCHOOL OF THE AMERICAS, FORT BENNING, GA
Whereas, the U.S. Army School of the Americas has successfully trained over 54,000 troops from Latin America and the United States;

Whereas, the School of the Americas has graduated 10 Presidents, 38 Ministers of Defense or State, 71 Commanders of Armed Forces, and 25 Service Chiefs of Staff;

Whereas, the School of the Americas systematically advocates human rights awareness and strives to graduate students whose respect for such values is enlightened and solidified;

Whereas, the School of the Americas has greatly improved its human rights curriculum adding new instructors and course requirements;

Whereas, the Department of Defense is using the School of the Americas concept to design a new facility in Germany, the George C. Marshall Institute, to educate and train former Soviet Union military personnel to understand the social and political benefits of a western democratic society;

Whereas, the School of the Americas has played a major role in the dramatic change in Latin America from dictatorships and military juntas to military supported Democratic Societies;

Whereas, for the first time in 200 years, democracy in Latin America is beginning to take hold and from Argentina to Guatemala coups are being resisted due to the influence of the School of the Americas;

Whereas, on September 30, 1993, there was an active attempt in the U.S. House of Representatives to close the School of the Americas which was rejected by a vote of 174-256;

Whereas, the School of the Americas is expected once again to be under attack from various organizations and Members of Congress during the 1994 session of the 103rd Congress;

Now therefore be it resolved, That the members of this organization do hereby go on record in full support of the U.S. Army School of the Americas at Fort Benning, Georgia; do advocate its continued operation; do oppose any attempts to reduce or eliminate funding for this program which has been instrumental in fostering democratic principles throughout Latin America; and do hereby direct that a copy of this resolution be transmitted to each member of the United States House of Representatives and of the United States Senate.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Chairman, I would also like to enter into the RECORD a letter I received on May 18, 1994 from Gen. Barry McCaffrey, a true patriot and commander in chief of our Southern Command.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE,
U.S. SOUTHERN COMMAND,
May 18, 1994.

Hon. SANFORD BISHOP,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. BISHOP: Am writing to express serious concern over pending legislative action which could threaten the existence of one of our most useful institutions—the U.S. Army's School of the Americas [SOA]. For over forty years, the school has been an effective tool for promoting foreign policy objectives in Latin America. The school's reputation for providing superior military training in Spanish while instilling the principle of military subordination to constitutional civilian rule is long-standing. My recent visit to the school confirmed my belief that it is an indispensable institution with no substitute.

As you are aware, SOA has played a key role in the education of many Latin American military leaders. The vast majority of these graduates are positive supporters of democratization, human rights, and the rule of law. Unfortunately, this gets little publicity. Just a few examples—

Commander of the Colombian Army who initiated the assignment of judges to units conducting counter-insurgency operations to ensure the protection of human rights.

Ecuadorian Minister of Defense who signed an accord with the Latin American Association on Human Rights to begin a sweeping human rights training program throughout the Armed Forces.

Current Venezuelan division commander who helped identify members of a recent coup attempt against a democratically elected government.

Every course at SOA offers a regional perspective, includes human rights and democratization instruction, and ensures exposure to U.S. military discipline and expertise. Latin American students and instructors leave the school with an enhanced understanding of the proper role of the military in a civilian-led democracy. Provided the opportunity to continue this vital mission, SOA can play a critical role in the development of Latin America's leaders well into the future, further consolidating the gains for democracy in our hemisphere.

The growth of democracy throughout Latin America is a direct reflection on this institution. Now is not the time to abandon these efforts and the democratic momentum the school helps provide. SOA plays an essential role in our strategy for the region. I respectfully urge you to work to preserve this important institution.

Very respectfully,

BARRY R. MCCAFFREY,
General, USA,
Commander in Chief.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that the critics of the School of the Americas continue to look into the past. We must maintain a vision for the future in our foreign policy and the School of the Americas is an excellent tool to further our foreign policy goals. The Congress will continue to ensure that the school maintains its human rights awareness training and adapts to the varying challenges that will face us in the future. However, we must not ignore Latin America, we must not forget our role as the only remaining superpower in the world, we must not close the School of the Americas, and we must never relinquish our grasp of the democratic ideals that the School of the Americas represents.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOKE].

Mr. HOKE. Mr. Chairman, today I am rising in strong support of the Kennedy amendment to eliminate funding for the U.S. Army School of the Americas. We have heard serious charges. We will hear more; that the School of the Americas is nothing more than a school for assassins. Others say that a handful of bad actors has tarnished the image of an otherwise reputable training facility.

Whichever is more accurate, the real question remains, why are we engaged in this activity in the first place? Students at the School of the Americas are not integrated into regular U.S. military training forces. They are taught the vast majority of their course work by other Latin American officers. What is the justification for having foreign nationals training other foreign nationals on U.S. soil at U.S. taxpayers' expense? If there ever was one, which I seriously doubt, there certainly is not now.

I have a special message for my Republican colleagues: We cannot have it both ways. We cannot vote to eliminate funding for the ICC, for the National Helium Reserve, the Rural Electrification Agency, the honey bee subsidy, the Appalachian Regional Commission, every single one of which deserves to be shut down, and shut down now and permanently. Then, just because a program is in the defense budget, are we are going to give it special kid glove status and stay away from it?

This program is pork. It happens to be defense pork, it happens to be Georgia defense pork, but it is simply pork. It certainly is obsolete today, if it ever was justified, and it should be eliminated.

Mr. Chairman, the graduates of the School of the Americas may be soldiers of righteousness. They may be soldiers of fortune. They may even be soldiers of evil. I suspect they have been all three. In any event, there are much better ways to accomplish the legitimate military existence and hemispheric cooperation goals of the United States. This is an anachronism. Right or wrong, it continues to give the United States a black eye with our Latin American colleagues.

I urge my colleagues, support the Kennedy amendment and close down the School of the Americas once and for all.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE CHAIRMAN PRO TEMPORE

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. RAHALL). The chair will ask visitors in the gallery to please refrain from expressions of support or disapproval of debate.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished minority whip, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] is recognized for 2½ minutes.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a very simple question to address. If you think having Latin American officers come to America, having them learn about soldiering in a democracy, having them learn why America has been able to be militarily strong and free, having them learn a tradition different than the Latin American tradition of military dictatorship; if you think that the progress of the last 20 years, as country by country in Latin America has left dictatorship to move towards democracy, if you think that process is useful, and you think that America has something to teach Latin American officers, then you should vote no on this amendment.

On the other hand, if you think being tainted by visiting America weakens you, if you think being at Fort Benning makes you less likely to be for freedom, if you think that somehow there is some conspiracy in the School of the Americas that is showing up, then probably you ought to vote yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there is any kind of conspiracy at the School of the Americas. None of us has suggested a conspiracy. What we do believe is that if we look at the real record of who has graduated, the army will cite the fact that 10 separate leaders of Latin America all went to the school. The trouble is, not one of them was duly elected. There have been changes in Latin America, but none of them have been because of the graduates of this school.

Mr. GINGRICH. I would ask to gentleman, how many graduates were there in the last 20 years of the school?

Mr. KENNEDY. There have been tens of thousands.

Mr. GINGRICH. My only point would be in the current democracies, there are graduates of the School of the Americas currently serving within a democratic framework doing exactly what we are trying to teach the Russians, like how to soldier within a democracy.

Mr. KENNEDY. If the gentleman will yield further, I appreciate the gentleman yielding. But the fact is we only have the record of those individuals who are involved in these hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of cases. We do not have the records of the ones who were not.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, all I would say to my good friend, and I appreciate so much your yielding, is that if you looked at the total record of all the officers who are graduates, who are currently, today, serving in democracies, you would be proud of the contribution America has made to the democratization of Latin America, just as today I am sure you are supportive of our efforts to teach the Russians and Ukrainians and others to learn to serve in a democracy.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming the time I yielded, I would conclude by saying we have a choice. Either the thousands that you say have not or the thousands that did, I would say that the thousands that did, ruin our reputation.

Mr. GINGRICH. Vote "no".

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS], the chairman of the Subcommittee on International Security, International Organizations and Human Rights.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman for yielding, and at the outset I want to pay tribute to my good friend from Massachusetts, Mr. KENNEDY, who has stood with me on many, many human rights issues during the course of his tenure in this body. There is no doubt in my mind that the motivations of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts are the finest, as indeed are the motivations of all of my colleagues who will support his amendment.

I rise in the strongest possible opposition to that amendment, and I do so for two specific reasons.

As one who came to this country as a student from abroad, I can testify that attending institutions in this country is the most democratizing influence for people who come from totalitarian societies.

The School of the Americas is no exception. There is no doubt in my mind that some of the graduates of the School of the Americas have indeed participated in human rights violations. I am convinced that many more would have participated in human rights violations had they not attended that school.

I am very proud of my own alma mater, the University of California. But I would hate to see suggestions that the University of California be closed down because some of the graduates of the University of California are serving in prisons for all kinds of violations of law.

There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that attending the School of the Americas has been a very positive force for human rights in Latin America and in Latin American militaries. There is simply zero logic, zero logic to arguing that since some of the graduates of the School of the Americas have misbehaved, and they have, this positive influence on democratizing the Latin American militaries should be closed down.

Vote "no" on this amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. Chairman, the School of the Americas is a noble thought: Bring Latin American soldiers to the United States to teach them respect for human rights. However, this ideal couldn't be further from reality.

Others have listed the scores of notorious human rights abusers who have graduated from our program. Let's look at the school itself. It is not much more than a country club for dictators.

Rather than directly exposing them to the rule of law that the U.S. military abides by, SOA students are isolated. All other international military education and training programs integrate students into U.S. forces so that they may experience first hand deference to civilian authority.

SOA students are given the chance to tour the United States, to go to an amusement park and a ball game. Supporters of the school claim this reinforces American ideals. Although I would not begrudge any visitor to the United States the chance to explore our great Nation, tourism, and materialism should not be the sole extent of the curriculum.

A few hours of human rights training have been added to SOA courses. What little time is devoted to this, to what ought to be the fundamental thrust of the school, is greeted with indifference or outright hostility by both students and instructors.

Without the School of the Americas, Latin American soldiers will still be able to participate in IMET programs. Abolishing the SOA will end their segregation which has only fostered continued abuse of authority and abuse of civilian populations.

I urge my colleagues to stand up for human rights, to support the Kennedy amendment and to abolish the School of the Americas.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MEEHAN].

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate my colleague and friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], for offering this amendment. Approximately a year-and-a-half ago, I made a speech as a freshman Member of Congress calling for a closing of the School of the Americas. There were not many Members of Congress that knew that the School of the Americas even existed at that time. But since that time, we have seen more Members of Congress become aware of the atrocities that have taken place at this school with very, very little being accomplished that is in the interest of democracy.

I recently went to El Salvador, appointed by the President to observe the elections there. We are making progress. But we face a house of cards in El Salvador.

What we need is, we have a new President there, just elected, who frankly, as one Member of Congress, I am not sure has a moral compass and the people around him, I am not so sure about.

The last place we want these new leaders to go is the School of the Americas. More than two-thirds of the Salvadoran soldiers named by the Truth Commission report on human rights abuses in El Salvador were graduates of the School of the Americas. By itself that should be enough to cause some serious soul searching.

We need to close the school and close it today.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. COLLINS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts and to support the U.S. Army School of the Americas. The School is specialized in training select Latin American military officers in military operations, teaching the values of democracy, and, yes, the need for human rights.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts has been wrong in his past statements that Haitian Police Chief Michel Francois was a student of the School. Since 1963, not one Haitian student has attended the School of the Americas. It is simply wrong to suggest that any member of the current Haitian regime has ever attended the School.

Similarly, there has been a noticeable absence of Cuban officers enrolled at the School. In its history, the School has never graduated a single Cuban officer. Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that the common characteristic of the Haitian and Cuban governments is that they are the only two remaining countries in Latin America that are nondemocratic.

Since the School was established in 1946 as the U.S. Army Caribbean Training Center, over 58,000 Latin American officers have graduated, and many have gone on to hold prominent positions in their country's military and government.

In 1963, the focus of the School was sharpened by President John F. Kennedy, and it was renamed the School of the Americas. The focus of the School became the teaching of Latin American armies how to defend against Soviet and Cuban inspired subversion. This was the goal, even if it meant supporting a dictator or a military coup.

Well Mr. Chairman, the times and politics of Latin America changed, and so, too, did the direction of the School. In 1983, President Reagan moved the School to Fort Benning, GA, with the focus again redirected to emphasize the role of a professional military force in a democratic society. Today, this includes instruction in effective response to drug trafficking, natural disasters, and respect for human rights.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, there was resistance to democracy in El Salvador, Ecuador, Venezuela and other Latin American nations. And, yes, there were lives lost in this transition. Sacrifices were made, but not in vain. Democracy in each nation has prevailed. And due to those lives sacrificed, Human rights is a major part of the curriculum at the School.

Over 35 Latin American nations are now governed by such a democracy with only 2 nations continuing to suffer under dictatorships. The School has represented a significant investment in this success of democracy throughout the region. Do not throw this investment in democracy out the window.

I urge the Members to defeat the Kennedy amendment, and continue to support the teachings of democracy in our hemisphere.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

I want to clarify for the record the fact is that this school has, in fact, suggested that they have begun to teach human rights at the school. I had the individual who was hired by the school come to my office and tell me that when he taught human rights at the school, he was ridiculed. He was abused, and he says that the notion that this school has reformed itself is a joke.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Ms. McKINNEY].

Ms. McKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I once again come before this House with grave concern about the School of the Americas.

Rather than assisting to establish democracy in a part of the world so important to us, the great tradition of School of the Americas results in a who's-who of the hemisphere's dictators. In Honduras, Panama, Bolivia, Argentina, Peru, and Ecuador the stain of the School of the Americas remains.

The graduates of the School of the Americas include dictators and soldiers implicated in human rights violations all over Latin America thanks to the American taxpayer.

No more should our American soldiers be introduced to the position of being sent into dangerous situations in order to clean up the mess made by a few of the graduates of the School of the Americas.

At its best, the school is ineffective. And at its worst, it gives future dictators the skills to overthrow civilian democratic governments.

I ask the House to vote today to close the doors on the School of the Americas—the School for Dictators.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TORRICELLI], chairman of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

I understand that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is well-intentioned, but it is flawed in its logic. That members of the armed forces from throughout Latin America in countries with a history of human rights abuses and interference in politics come together with officers from the military of the United States with the greatest history of respecting political rights and human rights and by that association themselves become transgressors, it defies logic.

In fact, it defies the facts. Last year in Venezuela, there was an attempted coup. It was officers trained by the United States who put it down.

In El Salvador today, in implementing the peace accords, it is officers trained by the United States. When there was an attempted coup in Guatemala only 2 years ago, it was officers trained by the United States.

Have there been transgressors? Of course, but something must explain that Latin America is fundamentally changing. Democracy is the coin of the realm. Rights are being respected again. Something is working, and American policy in this school is a part of that success.

□ 1240

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, that three of the coup leaders in Guatemala all were graduates of this school. The notion that somehow our military are able to influence these people in these foreign countries is simply not the case.

We have also brought in, since the Salvadoran soldiers killed the six priests, seven or eight of those individuals who killed the priests have come to America and went to this school after they killed the priests. That is the record of this school, and that is the reputation that rubs off on our country throughout Latin America.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. KOPETSKI].

Mr. KOPETSKI. Mr. Chairman and Members, I rise in strong support of the Kennedy amendment, and want to make three points. First, if we do want to help develop leadership skills in Central America, then let us close the school, put the $3 or $4 million we put into that university in creative scholarship programs at the University of California or the University of Georgia.

Second, if we do commit American troops to Haiti, remember that we trained the opposition that is going to be trying to kill our soldiers.

Third, understand the purpose and the history and track record of this university. It is a university of shame. This is a university where students major in murder. This is a university where they minor in mayhem. They receive a master's in the art of oppression, repression, and reprehensible conduct by any human rights standard.

In the name of America's honor, let us dismantle this university today.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE CHAIRMAN PRO TEMPORE

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will admonish visitors in the gallery that they are here as guests of the House of Representatives. Expression of approval or disapproval of remarks on the floor is not allowed.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, when this school was founded in 1946, there were five Latin American democracies, five. Today there are over 35 Latin American democracies. As a matter of fact, there are only two that are dictatorships left in Latin America, Haiti and Cuba. Those are the only two that have never participated in this School of the Americas. If we want to talk statistics, look at that.

What this bill is is Castro's last gasp. He must really be enjoying this, and hoping that they can close down this school. Jesus Christ had 12 Apostles, one of whom went wrong. You would not tell the other 11 to disburse because one went wrong. John Wayne Gacey murdered 33 people. I do not know where he went to high school, but I would not close it down. I suspect some people from that school were pretty decent people.

This is a non sequitur. It does not follow. Yes, there are bad people. Yes, some of them go to our schools. However, are the schools bad? No. These are American schools, taught by American military. It is a non sequitur. It does not follow that some people have done wrong. They have done wrong despite what they were taught, not because of it.

This is an unwise, to put the most euphemistic tone on it, an unwise amendment, and I hope it is resoundingly defeated.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, I would inquire how much time I have remaining.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. RAHALL). The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON] has expired. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BARRETT].

Mr. BARRETT of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Kennedy amendment to prohibit the use of funds for the Army's School of the Americas. This amendment is about where we have been in the past and about where we want to go in the future. Are we going to continue to uphold a tradition of human rights abuse, or are we going to truly promote democracy and peace in this hemisphere and around the world?

The evidence against the School of the Americas is overwhelming:

Manuel Noriega is a graduate; 124 of the 247 Colombian officers cited for human rights violations attended the school; and two-thirds of the Salvadoran soldiers cited by the truth commission for murder, torture, and disappearances trained at the School of the Americas.

A "yes" vote today is not going to erase the human rights tragedies that have occurred in Latin America, but a "yes" vote will say loud and clear that the United States will no longer permit outrageous abuses of human rights by U.S.-trained foreign militaries. We have started to see positive changes taking place in some countries of this hemisphere, and we need to further the progress that has been made. A vote for this amendment will do just that.

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to advise the House of my absence for part of the debate on H.R. 4301, the National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1995.

Consequently, I want to explain why I requested to be paired as a "nay" vote to the amendment offered by my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts. I appreciate the honesty of his motives in offering this amendment to eliminate operations and maintenance funding for the U.S. Army School of the Americas [SOA]. But I disagree with his assessment of the school and its graduates. The closure of the SOA would be detrimental to our relationship with Latin American countries, and could hinder progress in human rights efforts in those countries.

The SOA was established under President John F. Kennedy's Alliance for Progress from the existing U.S. Army Caribbean Training Center in Panama. In 1984, the SOA was moved from Panama to Fort Benning, GA. It has only been since the early 1980's that human rights instruction and emphasis has been a part of the curriculum. Most of the individuals labeled "dictators" in various reports and publications attended the school long before the SOA emphasized human rights. And since the inclusion of human rights training at the SOA, the curriculum is structured so that each student receives, on average, 30 minutes of human rights training and/or exposure every day.

The purpose of the SOA is to provide guidance to Latin American military personnel to respond to drug trafficking, natural disasters, and human rights. The SOA emphasizes the role of a professional military force in a democratic society. I support these objectives, as democratically elected civilian governments of Latin America support them. They welcome the opportunity to have their soldiers educated at the SOA because of its emphasis on civilian control of military forces.

Each year, soldiers from Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay, Venezuela, and the United States attend the SOA. No other school in the world with such a small operations budget brings together future civilian and military leaders of 16 countries in a purposeful effort to prepare for the future, strengthen alliances within a hemispheric region, and increase mutual understanding, cooperation, and the reinforcement of the principles of democracy among neighboring countries.

Last October, the United States strengthened the selection process for candidates seeking to attend the SOA. This process includes checking names by U.S. intelligence agencies and State Department security officers. In narcotics-producing countries, the Drug Enforcement Agency, Federal Bureau of Investigation, and other law enforcement agencies evaluate possible candidates for any record of criminality, drug trafficking, or human rights abuses. The revised process makes it far more likely that human rights abusers, criminals, drug traffickers, and those associated with them, will not become students at the SOA.

We should understand that the SOA takes on the very difficult task of teaching students who often come from countries with long histories of dictatorships and abuse, the value of promoting human rights. It is difficult to quantify the number of abuses that the SOA's training has prevented, so this debate often turns to a name-calling game that has little practical value. Yes, some 100 of the 58,000 graduates have documented human rights abuses. But, we must not forget about the other 57,900 graduates. Over 100 SOA graduates served or currently serve their nation and its people from the highest levels of civilian and military office—from chief executive to commander of major military units. Furthermore, hundreds of SOA graduates currently occupy positions of leadership and command at all levels in their military and support democratically elected national leaders.

For example, SOA graduate Gen. Hernan José Guzman, Colombian Army commander, led a determined effort to curtail human rights abuses by initiating innovative programs such as the assignment of judges to accompany brigades during counterinsurgency operations. Their presence helped ensure that the civil rights of all personnel were protected. Another graduate, Brig. Gen. Eumenes Fuguet Borregales, the current Director of Operations of the Venezuelan Army Staff, helped put down coup attempts in Caracas—February and November, 1992—while Commander of the 31st Infantry Brigade. This list could go on.

In the early eighties, El Salvador was accused of about 2,000 human rights violations per month; in the latter part of the decade, that figure dropped to approximately 20 each month. Although SOA cannot take all the credit, almost 50 percent of El Salvadoran officers have graduated from the school since 1986.

Let me make one final observation. If Congress closes the SOA, it will negatively affect our ability to have a meaningful and cost-effective vehicle to promote democracy and human rights within the ranks of the Latin American military. The State Department, Pentagon, and participating Latin American governments all firmly believe the existing SOA program is the best approach to achieving important national security and foreign policy objectives. If SOA were abolished, training for Latin American military personnel would become more expensive and fewer officers and enlisted personnel would be afforded exposure to U.S. training and values. Opportunities to develop joint peacekeeping with Latin American nations and exposure to human rights and democratization training would be reduced. And, the United States would lose a valuable vehicle that exposes non-English-speaking officers and noncommissioned officers from Latin America to democratic values.

When objectively reviewed, we cannot dispute the fact that the overwhelming majority of SOA graduates honorably serve their countries as professional men and women. Clearly, there is no correlation between reported misconduct by individual SOA graduates and the professional education and training they received at the school. All the evidence, anecdotal or empirical, would lead you to the opposite conclusion.

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment to end funding for the School of the Americas and urge my colleagues to do the same.

Last year, I voted against this amendment because I believed that it was important to try and impress upon the Latin American military officers who trained at the school American values, especially respect for human rights and democracy.

However, it is now clear to me that the school has failed to achieve those objectives. Instead of providing foreign military officers with respect for human rights, the school's graduates have become some of the worst human rights abusers in the world. Many of the graduates returned to their home countries to participate in the violent overthrow of their governments and seize power themselves. The fact of the matter is that the School of the Americas has been a failure.

We have heard many times during this debate that defense cuts are hurting the American men and women who have signed up to serve our country. Just today, when the Appropriations Committee marked up the military construction bill, we heard how defense cuts were resulting in the cancellation of many housing programs for military families. In my own State, the National Guard's Camp Smith is desperately in need of new housing. Camp Smith's officers, NCO's, and enlisted men and women are all living in cramped, dilapidated quarters. But the resources were not available to fund new housing at the camp.

If we cannot even afford to adequately house our own soldiers, how can we continue to operate this school whose teaching is not achieving its stated purpose. On this item, it is time that we get our priorities in order.

I hope my colleagues will join me this year in voting in support of this important amendment.

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Chairman, I consider it both a duty and a privilege to join in opposition to funding for the School of the Americas.

This is not a school but a scandal. It is a training ground for dictators and thugs like Noriega and D'Aubuisson—who get their training in America with American taxpayers' dollars, and then go home and use their training to oppress and murder their own people.

This school for atrocities costs American taxpayers some $40 million a year, if we count in salaries and living expenses for the trainees or perks like free trips to Disney World. What we get in return is that we get to be identified with tyranny and oppression.

This is not just a boondoggle, but a shameful and murderous boondoggle which discredits the United States at the same time that it kills the people whose welfare we claim to support. End the killing and the waste and stop this scandal.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY]. Simply stated, the School of the Americas remains the most effective way to ensure that Latin American military personnel respect human rights and the authority of the emerging democratic governments in that region.

As the only West Point graduate serving in this body, I am most sensitive to the heinous deeds perpetrated by individuals trained by the U.S. Army. However, I am also acutely aware of the great contribution that military personnel can make to a democracy. It is for both of these reasons that I support preserving funding for the School of the Americas.

Unfortunately, the positive contributions made by the vast majority of graduates of the School of the Americas are forgotten amidst the talk of those few individuals who have attended the school and later been implicated in human rights violations. In fact, of the 58,000 officers that have graduated from this institution over the past 31 years, over 99.3 percent have gone on to serve their countries in a professional and admirable fashion.

Typically, though, the U.S. Army is not satisfied with a failure rate of seven-tenths of 1 percent. In addition to incorporating mandatory human rights training into the school's curriculum creating an external review board, the Army has also thoroughly revised the selection process by which candidates gain admission to the school. This new standardized screening process requires all potential students to earn admission based on a demonstrated history of their respect for the law and human rights.

Admittedly, there is no guarantee that these changes will prevent future graduates from betraying the democratic ideals drilled into them at Fort Benning. However, it would be even more disingenuous to claim that closing the School of the Americas would prevent future human rights abuses from occurring.

Mr. Chairman, it is clear that we must do all we can to nurture the growth of democracy in Latin America. Keeping the School of the Americas open is critical to that effort because it is there that the men and women of the U.S. military interact and communicate most effectively with their Latin American counterparts.

I urge my colleagues to vote against this well intentioned but misguided amendment.

Mr. HAMBURG. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Kennedy amendment to terminate funding for the School of the Americas.

This amendment will cut $2.5 million for the school, a small fraction of the amount we spend on defense in this country. But this amendment is not just about dollar savings; it's about what those dollars fund.

There can be no mistake that the School of the Americas has trained some of the most despised and corrupt military officers in Latin America. A list of their graduates reads like a rogue's gallery of individuals that have wreaked havoc and destruction on the people of Latin America.

Roberto D'Aubuisson, Leopoldo Galtieri, Manuel Noriega. Respect and promotion of human rights do not spring to mind when these names are read. Graduates of the School of the Americas have planned and carried out some of the most heinous crimes in this hemisphere, including the murder of six Jesuit priests in El Salvador.

The United States, in the course of the past decade, has spent roughly $6 billion to wage war in El Salvador. That war is over. The Nation as a whole is reconciling its past and moving towards a future based on democratic ideals and respect for human rights.

Our foreign policy should reflect this. We have spent billions of dollars to wage war, and we should now be working to ensure that a new mutual relationship with El Salvador based on democracy and human rights is established. Continued funding for the School of the Americas is an impediment to that process.

People across this Nation are tired of their tax dollars being used in this way. Bill Thompson from my district has joined with people from across the country on the steps of the Capitol for the past month, fasting against continued funding of the School.

I urge you to support this amendment and in doing so support the people of this Nation, the people of Latin America, and the future of U.S.-Latin American relations.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. All time has expired.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] has that right, and is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I have tried to listen to both sides of the aisle on this debate. I have a few remarks to make before we vote.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY]. I support this amendment, not, Mr. Chairman, because there are not good and honorable U.S. personnel currently employed at the school; not because there are not any School of the Americas graduates who moved on without becoming heinous human rights abusers; and, finally, not because I wish to deny Latin American military the opportunity to obtain training in our country.

Rather, Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment because during the cold war ordinary people in Latin America came to see the school as the U.S. military institution at which their most brutal and vicious oppressors honed their military skills. Several of the previous speakers have outlined specifically who those persons were. I choose not to speak to it further.

Let me say there have been, on numerous occasions, Members who have arisen in the well of the House to talk about sending signals to other parts of the world about our commitment to democracy, our commitment to human rights, sending signals from this Congress. We have an opportunity from these Chambers to send a signal.

The people of the region, Mr. Chairman, fought long and hard to free themselves of oppressive regimes. In some cases like Haiti, Mr. Chairman, the struggle continues. However, in the many years that it has been in existence, the School of the Americas has not exactly established an outstanding reputation as promoting democracy, protecting human rights, or condemning or isolating brutal militaries.

The cold war, Mr. Chairman, and all of its anxieties are behind us. The cold war is over. We must now, through the adoption of this amendment, in this gentleman's humble opinion, signal to our neighbors that we are at last free to pursue regional relationships that are healthy, dignified, and respectful.

Mr. Chairman, these are the cornerstones of which the promotion of true democracy rests, and the establishment of mutual beneficial ties in a multiplicity of spheres, at a multiplicity of levels. That is the signal here.

We often know that we do many things that speak to symbolism. What better form of symbolism, Mr. Chairman, to say that we walk away from the tyranny of training oppressors.

If our Latin American neighbors perceive us as operating a school that has done that, what better way to do it in a post-cold-war environment than to get rid of that?

Mr. Chairman, with the passage of this amendment, Latin American military personnel, and this speaks to the issue that our distinguished minority whip raised, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH], they would be free and welcome to continue receiving military training in the United States. However, instead of being isolated in a so-called Latin American school environment, why not train them in the same places that we train every other leader throughout the world?

It sends an incredibly bad message, given the history of oppression and violence that has taken place in this hemisphere from the School of the Americas.

So for those who say we need training, there is no problem about training. There is no lack of capacity. However, why train in the School of the Americas and train other world leaders somewhere else? Let them all train together. They can benefit from the military-to-military contact that speaks to civilian rule and democratic principles.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the Kennedy amendment gives the United States an important opportunity to signal a new beginning, symbolically as well as sub-stantively, in our dealings with the region. It presents and represents an opportunity to break, both symbolically and substantially, with all of the errors and all of the pain of the past.

I would argue that we step forward boldly into a new reality, into a new future, into a new set of relationships. I urge my colleagues to vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have said on other occasions that I have been amazed at the fact that our maker has endowed us with minds that allow us to look at the same facts and arrive at conclusions 180 degrees apart from one another.

□ 1250

Having said that, I never cease to be amazed at the agility of the minds of our liberal friends. They can stand reason on its head.

Someone said not long ago that liberals cause arthritis. I do not know if that is true or not. But they cause all kinds of other mischief. Today is a good example.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DARDEN].

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Armed Services yielding to me, and I join with my colleagues from Georgia and my former colleagues from the Committee on Armed Services in opposing in the most strong as possible terms this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, The purpose of the School of the Americas is to develop and conduct doctrinally sound, relevant, and cost-effective military training. It is designed to foster cooperation among Latin American armies, to promote military professionalism, and to expand knowledge of United States customs and democratic traditions to the armed forces of Latin America.

The question then arises, is the School of the Americas meeting these objectives? In my opinion, there is no doubt that this institution is an overall success story.

The School of the Americas has laid a strong democratic base for the more than 58,000 Latin American and Caribbean military officers, cadets, and non-commissioned officers who have successfully completed the professional military education and training courses. Without this school there is no way to tell how many Latin Americans would have fared at the hands of their leaders. There is no way to tell how many might have been treated inhumanely and denied the basic fairness associated with democratic principles. But the presence of this school has been an important reason that democracy now flourishes in Latin America.

I will not deny that several students of the School of the Americas have been abusive to the citizens of their nation. However, I would suggest that these abuses are not a product of the School of the Americas. These abuses would have occurred regardless of participation in the school's courses. I do not believe that anyone here really believes that this school is teaching Latin Americans to return to their country and deny the principles of democracy and violate human rights. That is inconceivable and it simply is not happening.

What has happened is that a small percentage of graduates of the school have returned to their country and been abusive. But I submit, this is the responsibility of the individual, not the School of the Americas. We simply cannot close an institution because a small percentage of participants are bad. If we closed every institution that had a few bad participants, none of us would come to work Monday because we would have to close Congress.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, the School of the Americas is critical if the democratic gains we have made in Latin America are to continue. I urge opposition to this amendment.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER].

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the School of the Americas is taught by your military officers. Those military officers are your neighbors, your friends in some cases, your children, your grandchildren, and who can say that associating with American officers the caliber of Colin Powell is not going to make those particular Latin American officers most honest, more supportive of democracy and more in keeping with our traditions and values?

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LAUGHLIN].

Mr. LAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding and I would say that my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts is right in the facts he cited but the gentleman did not cite all the facts and, that is, there have been over 58,000 Latin American officers being exposed to democracy in America and where better should we expose those people that come from regions of the world to democracy than in our own country where our military has a history of being subservient to civilian control?

Mr. Chairman, we have heard all the horrible examples that have been cited. Let me give two success stories of the graduates:

First, none of the Haiti rulers today in power went to that school. Second, General Guzman, Colombian army commander, has instituted human rights reform by assigning judges to the brigades as they go out in the field. Third, Brig. Gen. Borregales has helped put down coup attempts in Venezuela.

Mr. Chairman, this is what democracy training at the School of the Americas is about.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Kennedy amendment. This is an extremely ill-advised idea, based on sensationalism and hyped-up charges against a key part of our strategy to spread democracy in Latin America. And the School of the Americas is that key part of our strategy.

Over 58,000 graduates, the overwhelming majority of whom have never been implicated in human rights abuses, have returned home to serve their countries honorably. And who today would claim that our Latin American strategy has not been working, Mr. Speaker? That is, who except Fidel Castro and the thug who runs Haiti, the only two remaining dictators in Latin America?

In the early 1980's, Latin America was almost completely run by dictators. It was awash in civil war and violent repression. Today, as I said it is just these two pathetic thugs in Havana and Port-au-Prince.

Our military training of these people works. To those who say that we encourage and even teach repression to Latin American officers, I would offer the example of El Salvador. Would the supporters of this amendment really claim that repression in El Salvador increased in proportion with our military involvement? The facts say otherwise.

In 1981, death squad killings exceeded 800 per month. By 1987, after several years of U.S. involvement, including training at the School of the Americas, total political killings were under 100.

Mr. Chairman, today Latin America is making great strides toward democracy. Political violence is way down. Free-market economics has conquered Marxism. The unbearably stupid and stultifying doctrines of Third World ideology and liberation theology are on the ash heap of history.

But let's face it. The military is deeply entrenched in Latin American history and culture. Rather than pretend this isn't so, as this amendment does, we need to recognize reality and continue to work to make that reality better.

Mr. Chairman let's kill this very bad amendment.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is not an easy issue. Both sides have made valid arguments about whether the School of the Americas should be maintained or terminated.

I strongly support continued funding for the School of the Americas. However, my support is with an important qualification—that the changes the administration has told us are underway be implemented promptly and unconditionally.

This includes changes in the courses of instruction, the amount of human rights training, the candidate vetting process, the creation and implementation of an outside civilian advisory board, and opening the school to a larger number of civilian instructors and students.

The United States Army has a positive contribution to make in the evolution of Latin American militaries. Our values as a society can be—and have been—transmitted to a large number of Latin officers through the School of the Americas.

This is not to ignore the number of Latin officers who have committed abuses after being trained at the school. I do not believe, however, that their subsequent conduct resulted from the training they received at the school. They were bad apples, pure and simple.

Based on a recent joint State Department-U.S. Army briefing for Foreign Affairs Committee staff, the School of the Americas recognizes that the cold war is over and that the school must reflect new missions, including counternarcotics, peacekeeping, and demining.

We need an effective mechanism to develop and conduct doctrinally sound, relevant, and cost-effective military training; to foster cooperation with Latin American armies; to promote military professionalism; and to expand knowledge of United States democratic traditions to Latin armed forces.

Rather than arbitrarily discontinuing the School of the Americas, we would be better served by requiring that we support it and make it live up to the legislative mandates that attended its establishment.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Chairman, a former Member who left here in disgrace graduated from my college. I do not want to shut it down.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. RAHALL). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY].

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Slattery for, with Mr. Dingell against.
Mr. Miller of California for, with Mr. LaFalce against.

Mr. Sawyer for, with Mr. Calvert against.
Mr. Becerra for, with Mr. Kolbe against.
Mr. Washington for, with Mr. Thomas of California, against.

Mr. Grams for, with Mr. Emerson against.

Mr. RICHARDSON changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I do so in order to explain to my colleagues that it would be the intention of this chairman to move that the Committee do now rise.

The reason that we do so is because there still remains important debate on two significant amendments, one offered by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] and one offered by this gentleman, regarding the selective service draft registration. These are important issues. They need to be discussed and debated and voted upon. The problem we have is one of time constraint.

Mr. Chairman, I have been asked either to have the debate and roll votes over until Monday, which seems to me to be a rather bizarre process because I think the votes ought to occur at the time we debate, otherwise by Monday Members are not even sure what they are voting on.

So it is the judgment of his person, if everyone concurs, that the Committee would now rise and come back on Monday, have the debate on these issues, vote on Monday rather than rolling the votes, which seems to me to be a much more rational way to proceed.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELLUMS. I certainly yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think that is certainly a reasonable request. The Committee on Rules is about to come to an agreement on a rule for the remainder of this most important bill that will come before this body this year or any other year. We need to meet this afternoon, and we cannot meet if we are on this floor during the next hours on these two amendments. I think it is a reasonable request, and certainly we on this side would agree to it.

Mr. DELLUMS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELLUMS. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to have an idea, maybe the gentleman has stated it, does he have any idea when these last two amendments would come up? I am interested in the suspensions.

Mr. DELLUMS. Reclaiming my time, these two amendments, the regular order would be to finish the amendments that were laid out in the first rule that we adopted. So it would mean that the Solomon amendment and the Dellums amendment would be the first two items to be debated and voted upon. That is the regular order under the proceedings of the first rule.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, we have suspension bills. I would assume that we would go back on this bill after the suspensions.

Mr. DELLUMS. That is a call of the leadership. I am simply saying that at the time that the DOD authorization bill, H.R. 4301, comes to the floor, these two amendments would be debated first.

□ 1320

Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the leadership will make a scheduling announcement later, but these two items will be debated first when we come back on this bill.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELLUMS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Chairman, what I am concerned about is most of the Members will not be back in this body to participate in that debate. If we just come back, and we take up both of these bills, most of the Members are going to be on airplanes across America coming back and will not have the opportunity to participate.

Mr. DELLUMS. Not if they do the suspensions first; and, No. 2, this gentleman has to fly all the way to California. But my job is also to be back here Monday, and I plan to do that, as I am sure the gentleman has planned to do.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELLUMS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, there are 17 suspension on Monday. There is no chance any debate will take place on this before 5 o'clock. I am sure every Member will be back in time for that.

Mr. DELLUMS. So, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is going to be protected; no problem.

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4301, the Department of Defense authorization for fiscal year 1995. This legislation makes great strides to balance our national security needs with Federal deficit concerns. H.R. 4301 accomplishes this goal and bolsters our ability to conduct national security given the end of the cold war and the domestic economic situation.

One such stride is a provision in the committee report which deals with an issue that I have had an interest in since the early 1980's. At issue is the possible use of the B-1B in maritime support roles for the Navy. During these time of tighter budgets, like many of my colleagues, I have concerns for protecting our military's state of readiness. Specifically, with an aging carrier fleet and a reduction in the number of new carrier battle groups, the time is right to revisit the issue of assigning the B-1B to maritime roles.

In its report, the committee has asked the Department of Defense to give serious consideration to the feasibility of the B-1B being used in maritime roles. The committee directs Secretary Perry to review this option and report back to the relevant committees no later than April 15, 1995. Mr. Chairman, because the committee has taken this action I chose not to ask for an amendment to H.R. 4301 asking for such a study. However, I wait with great interest for the results of this study and stand prepared to take the necessary actions to ensure that Secretary Perry and the Department give this option every consideration.

Currently, the Navy plans to retire its A-6E force by 1998. This will leave the Navy without an aircraft having all weather strike capabilities until the proposed Joint Advanced Strike Technology [JAST] Program produces an operational aircraft. Such an aircraft is not estimated to be operational until 2007. The ability of the carrier battle group to remain on station as a demonstration of U.S. interest, concern, and resolve cannot be duplicated by any Air Force. Given the essential role of the carrier battle group in U.S. diplomacy, it is important that they are in a constant state of readiness.

Simultaneously, Russia is maintaining a strong Navy, strongly oriented to the anticarrier mission. It is making efforts to develop new highly capable antiship missiles, for use by their navy and for sale to others. Many of the Republics in the former Soviet Union are obtaining Naval and other forces which pose potential threats to U.S. carrier battle groups and maintain a presence in areas of concern to the United States. This will without question place our ships and sailors at risk. Unfortunately the tactical protection through an all weather strike capability can only be achieved through tactical control of the assets by the battle group commander which cannot be based in the United States.

Recently, Gen. Merrill McPeak of the Air Force recently called for the 30 to 36 B-1B's be placed in "attrition reserve" as called for in the Clinton administration's Bottom-Up Review [BUR]. Under this plan, these aircraft will not undergo the modification program projected for the B-1B fleet to fit it for conventional missions as called for in H.R. 4301. The Congress has spent $20 billion—$30 billion in today's dollars—on the B-1B and less than 10 years after the first delivery the Air Force is planning to scrap about one-third of its fleet. This is the sort of waste which breeds popular cynicism about the Pentagon, the Congress, and Government.

I suggest that the Air Force be forced to modify the entire B-1B fleet. If the Air Force finds a surplus of the aircraft, I believe this surplus could be put to good use by the Navy, pending the reintroduction of a carrier based aircraft with all-weather strike capabilities. There are several reasons why the B-1B's should be considered for helping to project naval capabilities throughout the world. The two most important being readiness and taxpayer savings. Using the B-1B in this role is an opportunity for the American taxpayer to get the most value out of a ready strategic investment. Therefore, Mr. Speaker the B-1B's must be used to defend our sea lanes and compensate for bomber shortages created by our aging bomber and carrier fleets.

There is consensus among the American people and this Congress that we commit considerable amounts of taxpayer dollars to our national defense. This Congress must do everything in its' power to ensure that our investment in national defense is maximized. Therefore, we must guarantee that this Government make the fullest use of the weapons systems it procures. It is in this spirit that I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4301.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE) having assumed the chair, Mr. RAHALL, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4301) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1995 for military activities of the Department of Defense, to prescribe military personnel strengths for fiscal year 1995, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the actions taken by this body thus far on the bill, H.R. 4301.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BARLOW. Mr. Speaker, I was absent on Friday, May 20, 1994, and was not present for rollcall votes 188, 189, and 190. But had I been in Washington and not my congressional district, I would have voted to approve the Dicks amendment to H.R. 4301. I would have voted against the Penny amendment to H.R. 4301, and against the Kennedy amendment to H.R. 4301. On rollcall vote No. 188, "yea"; On rollcall vote No. 189, "nay"; and on rollcall vote No. 190, "nay".

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent on official business on Friday, May 20, 1994 for rollcall vote No. 190. Had I been present on the House floor I would have cast my vote as follows:

Roll No. 190: "Yea" on Representative KENNEDY's amendment to prohibit any funds authorized in the bill H.R. 4301, the National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1995, to be used to operate the Army School of the Americas.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, due to commitments in Florida, I was unable to vote today on the House's partial consideration of the 1995 defense authorization. Had I been here, I would have voted "yes" on the Dicks amendment, "no" on the Penny amendment, and "no" on the Kennedy amendment to close the School of the Americas.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL CONFEREES ON H.R. 322, MINERAL EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1993

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Chair appoints the following additional conferees on the bill (H.R. 322) to modify the requirements applicable to locatable minerals on public domain lands, consistent with the principles of self-initiation of mining claims, and for other purposes:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Chair appoints the following additional conferees:

As additional conferees from the Committee on Agriculture for consideration of sections 107, 201-09, 301-04, 404, 407, 408, 411, 416, 418, and 419 of the House bill, and sections 7-10 and 12 of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Messrs. DE LA GARZA, ROSE, and ROBERTS.

As additional conferees from the Committee on Education and Labor, for consideration of section 7 of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Messrs. FORD of Michigan, MURPHY, and FAWELL.

As additional conferees from the Committee on Energy and Commerce for consideration of sections 3, 201-08, 301-03, 414, and 420 of the House bill, and sections 7, 8, and 12 of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Messrs. DINGELL, SWIFT, and CRAPO.

As additional conferees from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, for consideration of section 3, 201-09, 301-04, and 414 of the House bill, and sections 7, 8, and 12 of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Messrs. STUDDS, HUGHES, and FIELDS of Texas.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 236. Concurrent resolution authorizing the 1994 Special Olympics Torch Relay to be run through the Capitol Grounds.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3355), an act to amend the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 to allow grants to increase police presence, to expand and improve cooperative efforts between law enforcement agencies and members of the community to address crime and disorder problems, and otherwise to enhance public safety, agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BIDEN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. HATCH, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. SIMPSON, and Mr. GRASSLEY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONGRESS EXCEEDS DELEGATED POWERS IN ITS MANDATES TO THE STATES

(Mr. HEFLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received two resolutions from the Colorado State Legislature, and I would like to share those with the Members and put them in the RECORD as a reminder to us.

The first resolution talks about the 10th amendment and reminds us that the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are States' powers, powers of the people, and that we should keep our hands off of that.

The second one goes a little further. The second one says, "We have had it, we are tired of it, and we are not going to take it any more." They have instructed the attorney general of the State of Colorado to file legal action against the United States of America to say, "You cannot do this any more based on the Constitution," and they have encouraged other States to join with them in this suit.

We must change the way we look. We cannot sit here on the Potomac and pretend that we are all-wise and all-powerful, and that we have the corner on what is best for every State in the Union. The Federal Government, Mr. Speaker, did not create the States for its benefit, the States created the Federal Government for their benefit. We have to change the way we look at this.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD the two resolutions referred to:

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 94-1035, COLORADO
STATE LEGISLATURE

Whereas, The 10th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States reads as follows:

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."; and

Whereas, The 10th Amendment defined the total scope of federal power as being that specifically granted by the United States Constitution and no more; and

Whereas, The scope of power defined by the 10th Amendment means that the Federal government was created by the States specifically to be an agent of the states; and

Whereas, Today, in 1994, the states are demonstrably treated as agents of the federal government; and

Whereas, Numerous resolutions have been forwarded to the federal government by the Colorado General Assembly without any response or result from Congress or the federal government; and

Whereas, Many federal mandates are directly in violation of the 10th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas, The United States Supreme Court has ruled in New York v. United States, 112 S. Ct. 2408 (1992), that Congress may not simply commandeer the legislative and regulatory processes of the States; and

Whereas, A number of proposals from previous administrations and some now pending from the present administration and from Congress may further violate the United States Constitution; now, therefore,

Be It Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fifty-ninth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, the Senate concurring herein:

(1) That the State of Colorado hereby claims sovereignty under the 10th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States over all powers not otherwise enumerated and granted to the federal government by the United States Constitution.

(2) That this serve as Notice and Demand to the federal government, as our agent, to cease and desist, effective immediately, mandates that are beyond the scope of its constitutionally delegated powers.

Be It Further Resolved, That copies of this Resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate of each state's legislature of the United States of America, and Colorado's Congressional delegation.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 94-1027, COLORADO
STATE LEGISLATURE

Whereas, The Constitution of the United States envisions sovereign states and guarantees the states a republican form of government in which decisions are made by the elected representatives of the people; and

Whereas, The state and local governments in Colorado are losing their power to act on behalf of their citizens, as the power of government is moving farther away from the people into the hands of federal agencies and officials who are not elected and who are unaware of the needs and concerns of Colorado and other states; and

Whereas, With increasing and alarming frequency important decisions affecting the lives of Colorado citizens are being made by the federal government in the form of both funded and unfunded federal mandates imposed on the states; and

Whereas, Congress fails to provide adequate means to implement many of the federal mandates directed to the states which places state governments in a vice that threatens to squeeze state resources beyond their limits; and

Whereas, Imposition of unfunded federal mandates requires states to fund the federal requirements with diminishing state revenues or jeopardize their eligibility for certain federal funds; and

Whereas, The states and Congress should engage in earnest discussions to resolve the difficult position that states are forced into by their efforts to comply with the growing number of unfunded federal mandates, because their trend could eliminate state flexibility to effectively deal with local problems as limited state resources are diverted to funding federally mandated programs; and

Whereas, Federal mandates threaten the fiscal integrity of the states and their right of self-determination; and

Whereas, The United States Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations recommended in a July 1993 report that "the federal government institute a moratorium on mandates for at least two years and conduct a review of mandating to restore balance, partnership, and state and local self-government in the federal system" and that the "Supreme Court reexamine the constitutionality of mandating as a principle"; and

Whereas, Numerous federal laws impose mandates on the state of Colorado, including, but not limited to the following: Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Act; Family and Medical Leave Act; Safe Drinking Water Act; Clean Air Act; Americans with Disabilities Act; National Voter Registration Act; Title XIX of the federal "Social Security Act"; and Water Pollution Control Act; and

Whereas, The members of the Colorado General Assembly want the members of the Colorado congressional delegation to fully understand the impact the actions of the federal government have on the state of Colorado, especially the difficulties imposed on the General Assembly in its effort to allocate resources to a large number of pressing state needs; and

Whereas, The federal court system affords a means to liberate the states from the grip of federal mandates and to give the power to govern back to the people; now, therefore,

Be It Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fifty-ninth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, the Senate concurring herein:

That legal action challenging the constitutionality of both funded and unfunded federal mandates, the court rulings that hinder state management of state issues, and the authority of the federal government to mandate state action is necessary to restore, maintain, and advance the state of Colorado's sovereignty and authority over issues that affect Colorado and the well-being of its citizens.

Be It Further Resolved, That the Colorado Attorney General examine and challenge by legal action, in the name of and on behalf of the state of Colorado, federal mandates, court rulings, the authority granted to or assumed by the federal government, and laws, regulations and practices of the federal government to the extent they infringe on the state of Colorado's sovereignty or authority over issues affecting its citizens.

Be It Further Resolved, That all of the states are urged to participate in any legal action brought pursuant to this joint resolution and that the Colorado Attorney General shall request and encourage such participation and shall cooperate with other states in any legal action that includes issues of joint concern.

Be It Further Resolved, That copies of this joint resolution be sent to the Attorney General and presiding officers of both houses of the legislatures of each of the states in the United States, the President of the United States, the Clerk of the United States House of Representatives, the Secretary of the United States Senate, and to each member of the Colorado Congressional Delegation.

CHARACTER IN GENERAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my remaining colleagues, those watching on television, and a million and a half Americans who are still following the proceedings about the issue of character.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when character is mentioned in this Chamber, the Parliamentarians get uptight. Everybody thinks it is focused in on one person down at the White House. The tremors start. We implement old rules that are supposed to govern the discourse among ourselves in this Chamber and the other body, the U.S. Senate. Suddenly we are cranking in the executive branch, though I don't remember the House leadership being so sensitive when Republicans were in the White House and regularly subjected to harsh language.

There is a new scandal on the front page every day. The front page of the L.A. Times mentions a scandal that I am not allowed to put into the RECORD. So instead I will speak about character in general.

In the paper the other day a lady found a faded newspaper clipping from 1924 tucked away in her grandmother's book, the grandmother having long ago gone to heaven. It was a book on public speaking. The book was 70 years old. The lady, Elizabeth Agnes Walsh of Curtis, NY, was the grandmother of the lady who brought this to the newspaper's attention. The clipping was an article penned by none other than President Calvin Coolidge, our Nation's 30th President and President Ronald Reagan's favorite President. The man who defined patriotism as "looking out for yourself by looking out for your country."

□ 1330

Coolidge titled his short piece "What the Country Needs," and, Mr. Speaker, if these are not powerful words pertaining to this very hour in American history, I do not know what are.

This is what President Coolidge said:

In America "we do not need more material development; we need more spiritual development.

We do not need more intellectual power; we need more moral power.

We do not need more knowledge; we need more character.

We do not need more government; we need more culture.

We do not need more law; we need more religion.

We do not need more of the things that are seen; we need more of the things that are unseen.

At 4 o'clock today I will appear on a television show called "Sally Jessy Raphael" about the major scandal of the moment. It was recorded last Friday.

Mr. Speaker, though Ms. Raphael and her staff were very nice, I will never again accept an invitation to appear on one of these tabloid shows. I am used to three against one, four against one, but nine against two? Thank heavens, I had a great Republican lady lawyer from New York, from the liberal wing of my party, with me. She did a great job, better than I did. But as this Sally Jessy Raphael show goes across the country, people will realize that there are forces attempting to burn at the stake, like Jeanne d'Arc, anybody who dares speak up truthfully against the current occupant of 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. Speaker, we need character, as we always do, as every Nation does. Character does matter.

SUPPORT THE C-17—SUPPORT OUR TROOPS IN THE FIELD

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). Under the Speaker's announced policy of February 11, 1994, the gentleman from California [Mr. HORN] is recognized for 40 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss a very important subject that will come before this House and the American people next Tuesday afternoon, and that is an amendment to return the Defense Authorization Act for our armed services to what the President recommended was with reference to the C-17 military airlift aircraft.

Next week we are going to be asked to make one of the most important decisions and cast one of the most significant votes of this particular Congress. How we vote and what we decide regarding the fate of the C-17 will directly affect the ability of our forces to succeed in time of conflict. It will also directly affect the ability of this Nation to deliver humanitarian aid to countries that have problems of starvation.

Senior military leaders and theater commanders have consistently cited strategic lift as critical to their ability to provide reinforcements and necessary equipment to the young men and women serving our Nation on the front line of the world's trouble spots.

Particularly as our Nation reduces the size of its military and its presence around the world, it is essential that we have the ability required to project force from our shores. That is why it is essential that we restore the C-17 line in the fiscal year 1995 Defense Authorization Act to the President's request of six (6) aircraft.

It is important to heed the message of the letter of May 17, 1994, which the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. John Shalikashvili, sent to the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS].

This is what the general said:

As I look into the future, it is clear that America's combat commanders will become increasingly dependent upon strategic mobility. * * *. America must have a core airlifter to replace the aging C-141. The continuing myths of a service life extension program for the C-141 or the ability of a commercial derivative to meet the needs of a core airlifter are just that—myths. Neither aircraft can carry the equipment to forward areas that the Army needs to win on tomorrow's battlefields.

General Shalikashvili stated unequivocally that: "Today there is only one alternative that can meet the requirements of a core airlifter—the C-17."

Gen. Colin Powell, former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff has, unsurprisingly, made the case for the C-17 most succinctly and effectively:

Our military strategy is changing from a focus on global war to a focus on regional crises. . . . And to deal with those kinds of crises you've got to get there fast. And you've got to get there with the mostest. And that's what the C-17 will do for us.

His words are echoed repeatedly by the commanders for whom the capabilities provided by the C-17 may mean life and death for young men and women serving under their command. Gen. Joseph Hoar, who succeeded Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf as commander of the U.S. Central Command [CENTCOM], made a compelling case in his May 17 letter to Chairman DELLUMS of the Committee on Armed Services. This is what General Hoar said:

As our forces are returning from overseas and increasingly based in the United States, I become the commander faced with the most strenuous requirement for mobility in the world. In the CENTCOM theater, because of the long deployment distances, we are particularly sensitive to, and dependent on, our ability to ensure the timely deployment of the early arriving lethal firepower—key to limiting the escalation of a conflict. This means armor, helicopters, rocket systems, and air defense missiles, most of which do not fit on any commercial aircraft. In the foreseeable future only the C-17, acting as the Nation's core military airlifter, can provide us this flexibility.

I agree with the commander of the U.S. Central Command, Gordon Sullivan, Chief of Staff of the Army, reinforced that point in a letter:

By 1997, 80 percent of America's Army will be stationed in the Continental United States as we complete our transformation to a power projection Army. * * * This Nation must have the strategic lift capabilities to project power rapidly to any potential trouble spot in the world. * * * While the aging C-141 fleet helps the Army fulfill this requirement today, we will need the C-17 to provide the strategic airlift for troops and equipment to provide our forced entry capability and simultaneous application of joint combat power across the depth of the battlefield in the 21st century. The C-17 is the only aircraft that can get the Army's outsized combat systems to the next war when required.

I agree with the Chief of Staff of the Army. I hope this House will too.

General Sullivan emphasized that the C-17 will provide the capability to deliver critical army outsized loads while allowing access to 9,000 more runways, an increase of 300 percent worldwide, then does the C-141 or the C-5, the two main load lifters which the services depend upon at the present time.

Equally important, General Sullivan noted, is that the C-17 will improve through-put capacity, or rapid off-load and turnaround on the ground, as the military put it; when you have a plane coming in, how fast can you land it, is there space on the airfield, how fast can you unload it, how fast will it return to the main base to continue to bring supplies, personnel, and other materials needed by the forward forces.

Essentially, that means how fast can we deliver the equipment in an efficient, effective, rapid manner. The performance characteristics of the C-17 will permit eight C-17's to fit on an airfield where three C-5Bs now fit.

General Sullivan added, "Had we had the C-17 during Desert Shield, we could

Mr. HUNTER. Will my friend yield?

Mr. HORN. I am delighted to yield to my distinguished colleague from California, Mr. HUNTER.

Mr. HUNTER. I want to commend my colleague for his advocacy for the C-17. I think it is appropriate you are doing such a total and long-range perspective on the C-17, because we are now, of course, commemorating the landing of Normandy in recent weeks.

We were down at the Air and Space Museum watching the 2-hour feature, which was extremely good. I think one of the messages that was sent to us when we watched that enormous military effort, power projection under the leadership of Dwight David Eisenhower striking the beaches at Normandy, coming up against the best that Hitler's panzer divisions could offer and ultimately spreading out and moving into a position to win the war in Europe, the key message that I got from that film, and I think from Normandy in general, was that getting there first with the mostest, getting into a strategic location with your equipment quickly, is and should be of utmost priority to military commanders.

The C-17 gives us the ability to get places quickly, on remote airfields that could not accommodate aircraft in the past, with large payloads, and to be effective early. And that is what saves lives, that is what reduces the number of body bags that come back to the United States in conflicts around the world.

Of all of the programs that we are looking at and analyzing in this defense bill, the C-17 is one of the most critical and one of the most important. I thank the gentleman for this very, very thorough presentation to our colleagues. I will be supporting you very strongly.

Mr. HORN. I thank my colleague. You have been always a strong supporter of the defense capability which this Nation needs in order to back up the leadership the rest of the world expects us to provide, and we thank you.

Noting that the C-17 has the capability to meet 100 percent of the aircraft capabilities on these various types of missions' success, the fact is in Desert Shield, a commercial wide-bodied substitute trying to substitute for the C-17 would have only performed one of those missions 25 to 50 percent of the time. It simply is not a viable alternative to think about commercial alternatives at this point in time in the evolution of the airlift airplane project, regardless of who that manufacturer might be.

The commercial alternative and a commercial wide-bodied substitute has little, if any, capability to address the military's needs in the typical contingencies that we now have facing us in various regions of the world, where small powers increasingly have nuclear capability; where two-bit dictators hold an arbitrary rule over their people; where democracy has not taken root.

Occasionally we have vital national interests that have to be protected, and it is this airlift capacity which seems innocent enough in essence that it is largely behind the lines, but it is taking needed equipment to the lines. And as my colleague mentioned, whether you are recalling Normandy in the Second World War, or you are describing other wars, what ultimately triumphs is the ability to deliver the human resources and the equipment produced by the industrial might of this and allied nations, into the field, readily, to back up the troops that need food, supplies, and reinforcement to accomplish the assigned mission.

At Tuesday's Committee on Armed Services hearing, General Fogleman stressed the importance of both the ability to land on austere, shorter runways, and to get the needed equipment to the troops in the field as efficiently and effectively as possible.

He reported that the Air Force, working with the Defense Mapping Agency, has concluded that the C-17 can land on 576 runways in the Far East versus only 217 for the C-5. The C-17 can land on 852 runways in Europe versus 184 for the C-5. The C-17 can land on 794 runways in Africa versus 137 for the C-5. The C-17 can land on 852 runways in Latin America versus 66 for the C-5.

This does not diminish the value of the C-5. The C-5 has done a noble job. It is an airplane that is three decades old. It is an airplane that is three decades old. New designs, new avionics, new types of engines are important, and they are what are in the C-17, an airplane that is operated by only three people: pilot, copilot-navigator, and the loadmaster, who works the computer system that delivers that load, whether it be at a fairly low altitude—even 10 feet off the ground—or after landing. Couple this with the C-17's ability to carry out-sized cargo and to off-load that cargo quickly and its advantage over the more limited commercial valiants, which would require a very cumbersome loading and unloading system for the more limited cargo that any of them could carry, and the need for the C-17 becomes even more obvious.

Deputy Secretary of Defense John Deutch has described the C-17 as "the highest priority defense system," if the military is to meet successfully its obligations in future years. Among the C-17's capabilities, which are not available in any other airlift aircraft, are the ability to back up and make tight turns, thus reducing the amount of ramp parking space needed, without its jet exhaust interfering with other aircraft; cargo door, ramp airdrop, cargo restraint systems that can be operated by one person and permit rapid unloading without special equipment.

The C-17 also has improved instrument displays that the two-person cockpit crew can easily read; built-in test equipment, modern avionics gear that are readily accessible to maintenance personnel.

The C-17 is an essential, perhaps the essential component of the military's ability to project power capably and in a credible way. This is especially so in light of the steady increase in the weight growth of army combat units over the last decade. The three army division types usually eligible for air deployment have seen weight growth increases between 36 and 55 percent. These weight increases in weapons, equipment and needed space are due to the changes in the force structure and the larger and heavier weapon systems. They correlate very closely with the increases in the airlift missions.

The trend for past and current weapons systems has been an emphasis on lethality-survivability, which generally involves increases in weight and size of the delivery of the weapons system and the use of that system.

For example, the M-2 series Bradley fighting vehicle has replaced systems that could be loaded three or four strong on this C-141, which again performed valued service for this country over several decades. Transporting the Bradley by C-141 is possible but impractical because of the massive disassembly and reassembly time required, 6 hours on either end.

The C-141 carries only one Bradley with the pallet of disassembled parts. By comparison, the C-17 can carry two Bradleys ready to drive on, drive off, and go right into battle.

The C-141, designed in the 1950's, could deliver most of the Army's combat vehicles over the past three decades. However, there are many new vehicles in the inventory which dramatically affect the military's ability to deliver combat forces in a timely manner.

One example relates to jeeps and their replacement, the HMMWV, otherwise known as the Humvee. The C-141 could carry 17 jeeps in a single load, but it can carry 5 five Humvees before it becomes cubed-out because of the additional width of the Humvee.

On the other hand, the C-17, with its wider cargo floor, is able to carry 2 Humvee's side by side for a total of 10, while the C-141 can only fit a single line of 5.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I asked the gentleman to yield simply to state that I want to congratulate him on the special order he has taken out here and on the diligent effort that he has put into the C-17 effort. One of the most serious problems that we face, and the gentleman knows it very well, is airlift capability. And as we look at the extraordinary challenges that we are facing throughout the world today, we have gone through this debate in the past. I remember when we had the Boeing alternative that many people had thrown before us, which obviously is inadequate.

It seems to me that the need to deal with airlift capability is pressing one that is before us. We have the answer. The answer is as my friend has pointed out so well, the C-17.

I know that he has played a key role in this effort. I congratulate him on that. I simply want to say that I want to do anything I possibly can to help us meet that very important national security imperative which lies before us.

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, who has done a tremendous amount in his leadership of this delegation in support of the defense of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Speaker, I just want to cross all of DAVID DREIER's t's and dot some i's and thank you for the good work you have done.

I went into your district and flew the simulator for this great aircraft, saw how aggressively and pro-actively they were trying to overcome the few growing pains that are generally in every system. The F-100 that I flew on active duty compared to the limited number of problems today and our accidents, we had no accidents with this one. It is ahead of schedule at Edwards. The F-100's were dropping out of the sky. It did not deter me, when I was a 22-year-old pilot who wanted to fly the world's fastest fighter.

We are not going to fly anything anywhere unless we have this system to fly the engines around and to carry individually one big massive 30-ton M-1 Abrams tank.

I want everybody to know so we do not get into all of this phony, actually bordering on lying, propaganda that the B-1 was hit with and is still hit with, this aircraft is flying. We have delivered now how many to Charleston Air Force Base? Three?

Mr. HORN. Much more than that are being tested there. A good part of the squadron in Missouri is already assembled.

Mr. DORNAN. And when we say tested up at Edwards Base, this means tested with loads, with load masters working them, carrying things and going around and across the seas with loads, working out with two other great Douglas aircraft, the C-124, and the C-133 that were the largest of their generation.

I just hope that people realize this is the state of the art and then some. It has a stick, two sticks like a fighter plane, side by side fighter. And this is the answer. Thank God you prevailed and General Fogelman, first to ever fly me in an Air Force fighter as a freshman Congressman back in January 1978, when he was a young major in Pittsburgh; four-star General Ron Fogleman's presentation before the Armed Services Committee the other day, Deputy Secretary Deutch, it was compelling testimony. And they took away all the fears that some Members legitimately had. I would like a laminated tiny card of your charts for my wallet. All kidding aside, it is excellent.

Mr. HORN. Thank you very much.

You, as a very distinguished fighter pilot, know that Gen. Merrill A. McPeak, the current Chief of Staff of the Air Force, is also a fighter pilot by background. And I saw him after he had just flown the C-17.

I said, smiling "I was a little worried that a fighter pilot could fly a big plane like that." He replied that he had never seen an airplane that handled as beautifully and effectively as the C-17, which is a great advance over the era you and many others flew in, whether it be Vietnam, Korea, or the Second World War.

The C-17 can carry five armored personnel carriers used by the Army versus only two for the C-141. This is because the C-141 is restricted to an allowable cabin load of 55,000 pounds. The five carried by the C-17 weigh almost 100,000 pounds combined.

The Army has cited a wide range of other weapons systems which are critical in the early days of a conflict which the C-17's enhanced capabilities will permit to be delivered more quickly and in greater numbers. These include the Multiple Launch Rocket System, the Patriot Missile System, AH-64 and UH-60 helicopters, the Armored Gun System, the Command and Control Vehicle, the Advanced Field Artillery System, the Forward Area Resupply Vehicle, the Line-of-Sight Antitank System, and the Bradley Fire Support Vehicle, quite a range. But the importance of these facts and the reason commercial derivatives cannot do this job is because of the special design that has been made in the interior and exterior of the C-17 to permit the hauling, in a sensible, efficient way, of these various combinations of military equipment that are needed abroad.

The bottom line is that the Army of the future will rely increasingly on the availability of airlift capable of delivering outsized cargo. And it will need to deploy from the United States to places all over the globe on short notice to defend American interests.

It is imperative that we provide the courageous young men and women putting their lives on the line for their Nation and for the cause of freedom the capability they need to defend themselves and to succeed in their mission with minimum loss of life and in the shortest possible time. We must not shortchange them or deny their commanders the C-17's airlift capability.

Mr. DORNAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORN. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DORNAN. I am sorry to interrupt. I was looking for a break in the thought processes there. This is something the gentleman will want for his special order.

Your staff called. No. 7, and this is not, and this shocked me. Here I said three, maybe I was off by one. Seven is already at the Charleston Air Force Base working out all the load lifting problems, and No. 6 has joined the test program up at Edwards. This program moves fast apace.

Mr. HORN. Right. I thank my colleague for that vital fact.

Only one airlift aircraft, the C-17, was specifically designed to meet the present and future military requirements as projected by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Only one airlift aircraft, the C-17, has been recommended by the military—the Joint Chiefs and the commanders in the field—and the senior civilian leaders of our country under a previous Republican administration and now under a Democratic administration including the current and former Presidents of the United States, as the system we need for today and well into the 21st century. As former Secretary of Defense Richard Cheney has said of the C-17, "It is an absolutely vital strategic asset regardless of what size force we have in the long term."

The C-5 and C-141 were designed decades ago to meet the needs of a military and a world very different from the one we have today. And civilian widebodied planes were designed to carry passengers between major metropolitan areas. These planes are fine in fulfilling the purposes for which they were designed, but the military leadership uniformly tells us they are not the answer when the lives of Americans are on the line.

As the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff has emphasized, there is only one plane that has the capabilities needed in a core airlifter. That plane is the C-17.

I have cited the Chief of Staff of the Army, and other generals as strong supporters of the C-17, but let us also hear from those who have flown the C-17 and worked with it. They, too, are its strongest proponents.

Said Capt. Mark Holland, a C-17 pilot at the Charleston Air Force Base in South Carolina: the C-17, "incorporates everything we know about airlift into one plane." Capt. Ron Nadreau, a former C-5 pilot and current C-17 test pilot, has concluded: "It's like going from Fred Flintstone to George Jetson." Lt. Col. Ron Ladnier, commander of the 17th Airlift Squadron, 437th Airlift Wing, observed: "If you asked me to do something important—like haul tanks into Mogadishu—and told me to pick the airplane I want, I'd have to choose the C-17."

Among loadmasters, those crucial technical personnel in the back of the plane who have the say over how this load is to be distributed and how it is to be unloaded, there are especially glowing comments.

Chief M.Sgt. Glen Morgan commented: "The C-17 has taken us from Neanderthal to state-of-the-art. Because it can land on such short airfields and carry such outsized cargo as the M-1 tank, we can go right into a trouble spot and begin the mission immediately without having to disassemble and reassemble equipment." M. Sgt. Cecil Whaley concluded: "It's very user-friendly. A single loadmaster can reconfigure the C-17 in flight, whereas with other airlifters, it took a minimum of two people." M. Sgt. Bill Ellis reported: "They have incorporated everything that is good from the C-130, the C-141 and the C-5 on this plane." Finally, M. Sgt. Tom Clemons, who has responsibility for maintaining the C-17, stressed: "The aircraft was built for ease of maintenance. We may end up being like the Maytag repairman."

In other words, there is less need for maintenance. That means a saving of the money. So does the size of the crew of three.

As I stated earlier, this is a program which has not been without its problems, but it is a program that both Republican and Democratic administrations have listed as a top priority in terms of our national security. It is a program which has received careful scrutiny by the Department of Defense under the leadership of Deputy Secretary of Defense John Deutch.

Deputy Secretary Deutch is now overseeing a 2-year probationary period for the C-17 in which the Air Force will be limited through 1995 to buying 40 of its planned 120 C-17's. In November 1995, the Pentagon will make a decision whether to proceed with further purchases of the C-17 or to shift to commercial aircraft derivatives or revived production of the C-5 cargo plane. The bill reported out of the Committee on Armed Services in effect negates the Air Force's plan, committing funds for commercial widebodies planes well in advance of the completion of the Pentagon's review in November 1995 and moving in a direction which Secretary Deutch has stated in congressional testimony does not provide the best airlift mix to meet the military's needs.

The operational effectiveness and cost effectiveness of the C-17 have been emphasized by both Secretary of Defense William Perry and Secretary Deutch. Secretary Perry, in a May 5 letter to Speaker FOLEY, said, "The C-17 aircraft continues to be the most cost-effective means to meet current and projected airlift requirements. The C-17's ability to deliver outsize cargo, combined with its special capability to use austere fields, will provide us with modern, highly capable strategic airlift." And Deputy Secretary Deutch, in recent testimony, stated, "In general, the results—of the Defense Department's Cost and Operational Effectiveness Analysis—showed that a fleet of C-17's operating to our best expectations was more cost effective than any combination of C-17's, CWB's (commercial widebodies), C-5B's or C-141's with service life extension program."

Let us not second guess our military leadership and our commanders in the field. Let us provide our men and women in uniform the capability they need to do the job we expect them to do. I urge my colleagues to vote against the Furse amendment, which would eliminate this program, cripple the forces of this country in all parts of the world. I urge my colleagues to vote against any proposal that will reduce our military's ability to respond in a time of crisis and to support the bipartisan amendment which will bring the defense authorization for the C-17 back to that of the President and the military's request for six.

THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, DC, May 5, 1994.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: On March 31, 1994 the Department of Defense provided the Committee on Armed Services draft legislation to authorize the Department of Defense to implement the January 1994 agreement between the Department and the McDonnell Douglas Corporation to settle C-17 issues.

Our nation has a critical need for inter-theater airlift modernization if we are to maintain our ability to project forces and respond to humanitarian missions worldwide. Our C-141 aircraft are wearing out. The C-17 aircraft continues to be the most cost-effective means to meet current and projected airlift requirements. The C-17's ability to deliver outsize cargo, combined with its special capability to use austere fields, will provide us with modern, highly capable strategic airlift.

Last May the Department directed the Defense Science Board to organize a Task Force to conduct an extensive review of the C-17 program. The objectives were to assess the current status and the contractor's capability to successfully complete development and transition into production, and to identify the changes necessary to ensure a successful program.

The Defense Science Board Task Force conducted a thorough examination of the C-17 program over a two month period. At the conclusion of its review, the Task Force reported that the C-17 is fundamentally a good aircraft, that the contractor can successfully build the aircraft if management and efficiency improvements are implemented, and that gridlock on contractual and business issues was seriously hindering program performance. The Task Force recommended a number of changes to instill greater discipline and better management into the program, and a comprehensive settlement to change the program environment.

Based on these findings and recommendations, and further intensive review by the Defense Acquisition Board over a period of several months, the Department proposed a comprehensive settlement of business and management issues to the contractor on January 3, 1994, which the contractor has accepted. In my view, this resolution of issues is essential to ensuring that the C-17 will meet the nation's strategic airlift military requirement. One key aspect of the agreement is the establishment of a probationary period during which the contractor will either demonstrate improved performance or the Department will consider other alternatives. Enactment of this proposal is of great importance to the Department, and I strongly urge its favorable consideration.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM J. PERRY.

CHAIRMAN OF THE JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF,
Washington, DC, May 17, 1994.

Hon. RONALD V. DELLUMS,
Chairman, Committee of Armed Services, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As I look into the future, it is clear that America's combatant commanders will become increasingly dependent upon strategic mobility. This mobility will continue to be based on an integrated triad of air, sea and surface capabilities. Despite the fact that two of these transportation modes are in relatively good condition with bright prospects for the future, I am deeply concerned that recent congressional actions may seriously degrade our airlift capability and ultimately threaten the viability of the entire strategic mobility system.

America must have a core airlifter to replace the aging C-141. The continuing myths of a service life extension program for the C-141 or the ability of a commercial derivative to meet the needs of a core airlifter are just that—myths. Neither aircraft can carry the equipment to forward areas that the Army needs to win on tomorrow's battlefields. There may be a future role for a commercial derivative to supplement a core airlifter, but a CONUS-based force that lacks a core airlifter is a hollow force.

Today there is only one alternative that can meet the requirements of a core airlifter—the C-17. We have all been frustrated with the repeated setbacks in the program, but we must not let this frustration obscure the facts. We now have an agreement in hand that allows us to test the capabilities of the airplane to meet warfighting requirements of America's combatant commanders and the capability of the program to meet efficiency and quality standards America's taxpayers deserve.

I ask for your support of the President's Budget Request for six C-17s in FY95, and for the reliability, maintainability, and availability and operational testing programs. Without the former, the program will not have the opportunity to demonstrate its significant improvements and production efficiencies. Without the latter, the C-17 will not be challenged to demonstrate its capabilities in the most rigorous testing program ever devised for an airlifter. Without your support, the program will guarantee to fail. We must not let this happen on our watch.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

JOHN M. SHALIKASHVILI.

U.S. ARMY, THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, DC.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
Armed Services Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC

DEAR SENATOR THURMOND: By 1997, 80% of America's Army will be stationed in the continental United States as we complete our transformation to a power projection Army. Our capability to lift the Army's heavy equipment by air and sea must keep pace with our changing requirements. This nation must have the strategic life capabilities to project power rapidly to any potential trouble spot in the world. We must get our forces to the fight.

Early arriving lethal combat power is the key to our joint warfighting capability. The Congressionally mandated Mobility Requirements Study generated the need for delivery of "outsized cargo" prior to the arrival of the fastest seafit. For the Army, this means armor, rocket systems, helicopters, and attack missiles. These weapon systems won't fit on any commercial aircraft—nor will they fit on most military airlifters in service today. Future air-deployable Army combat units will rely increasingly on the availability of airlift to carry this type of cargo.

The C-7 will provide the Air Force the capability to deliver critical Army "outsized loads" while allowing access to 9,000 more runways (an increase of 300%) worldwide than the C-141 and C-5. The C-7 can land on the same runways as the C-130 and deliver four times the cargo weight. Equally important, the C-17 will improve throughput capacity, or rapid off-load and turn-around on the ground, by increasing the "maximum on the ground" or MOG capacity. The performance characteristics of the C-17 will permit 8 C-17's to fit where 3 C-5's fit. Had we had the C-17 during Desert Shield, we could have delivered the first airborne brigade in 54 hours with just 93 aircraft—and improvement of some 34% over the 82 hours it took to deliver that brigade with 158 C-141's and 2 C-5's.

Finally, I am concerned about our joint capabilities for forced entry operations. In the Gulf War, we enjoyed the luxury of time and deployment to a country with secure and modern air and seaports. This may not always be the case. While the aging C-141 fleet helps the Army fulfill this requirement today, we will need the C-17 to provide the strategic airlift for troops and equipment to provide our forced entry capability and simultaneous application of joint combat power across the depth of the battlefield in the 21st century.

I fully appreciate the concern over the troubled history of the C-17 acquisition program. However, I urge you to stay the course outlined by the Secretary of Defense earlier this year. The C-17 is the only aircraft that can get the Army's latest combat systems to the next war when required. I respectfully solicit your support to maintain the President's request for the FY 1995 funding for the C-17.

Respectfully,

GORDON R. SULLIVAN,
General, U.S. Army.

U.S. CENTRAL COMMAND,
OFFICE OF THE COMMANDER IN CHIEF,
MacDill Air Force Base, FL, May 17, 1994.
Hon. RONALD V. DELLUMS,
Chairman, Committee on Armed Services, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

MR. CHAIRMAN, As you know I am concerned and have been critical of the current state of America's airlift forces. However, I am even more concerned about our future ability to project US forces by air.

As our forces are returning from overseas and increasingly based in the CONUS, I become the CINC faced with the most strenuous requirement for mobility in the world. In the CENTCOM theater, because of the long deployment distances, we are particularly sensitive to, and dependent on, our ability to ensure the timely deployment of the early arriving lethal firepower—key to limiting the escalation of a conflict. This means armor, helicopters, rocket systems, and air defense missiles, most of which do not fit on any commercial aircraft. Only the C-17 and C-5 can deliver this requirement.

In addition, during the Gulf War, we were able to deploy in a country with secure air and sea ports. In this scenario, I have said we could be well served by the effectiveness of large commercial type aircraft moving large amounts of bulk cargo, particularly during the sustainment phase of an operation. However, I do not feel this will be the case in the early surge phase of future operations.

We must ensure that all CINCs have the flexibility to conduct deployment operations given any set of theater constraints. In the foreseeable future only the C-17, acting as the Nation's core military airlifter, can provide us this flexibility.

Mr. Chairman, CENTCOM is dependent on the country's mobility system. We need the C-17. I urge you to support the modernization of the nation's strategic airlift as proposed by the Secretary of Defense and requested by the President in his FY 1995 budget.

J.P. HOAR,
General,
U.S. Marine Corps.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 12 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m., the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. KREIDLER].

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON RULES TO FILE A PRIVILEGED REPORT ON A RESOLUTION ACCOMPANYING THE BILL, H.R. 4301, NATIONAL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1995

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules have until midnight tonight to file a privileged report on a resolution accompanying the bill, H.R. 4301, National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1995.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I wanted to say to my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, chairman of the Committee on Rules, that the rule he is filing is an agreed-to rule by the Republican side of the aisle as well. It is not entirely to our liking. We support it reluctantly. There have been many, many hours of negotiation between the Republican and Democratic leaderships. It is a rule that should be supported because of the seriousness of the bill before us. We have to get this bill enacted before we get into the appropriations process. Therefore, we will be supporting the rule on this side of the aisle.

I thank the gentleman for his consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for this time that I might inquire of the distinguished majority whip, the program for next week.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BONIOR. I thank my friend, the Republican leader.

The House will proceed as follows next week: We will meet at 10:30 for morning hours on Monday, May 23. Then we will go into session at noon, at which time we will have 18 suspensions, of which I believe the minority leader has a copy. I will not read through all of the bills. There are 18 of them:

H.R. 4425, fiscal year 1995 VA medical construction authorization.

S. 1654, to make certain technical corrections.

House Concurrent Resolution 176, to recognize and encourage the convening of a National Silver Haired Congress.

H.R. 4429, to authorize the transfer of naval vessels to certain foreign countries.

H.R. 4246, Panama Canal Commission Authorization Act for fiscal year 1995.

H.R. 3679, Junior Duck Stamp Conservation Program.

H.R. 3982, Ocean Radioactive Dumping Ban Act.

House Concurrent Resolution 238, authorizing the use of the Capitol grounds for the Greater Washington Soap Box Derby.

H.R. 3840, the Sam B. Hall, Jr. Federal Building and U.S. Courthouse.

H.R. 3724, the Brien McMahon Federal Building.

H.R. 965, Child Safety Protection Act conference report.

H.R. 3869, Minority Health Improvement Act of 1994.

H.R. 3863, to designate the Medgar Wiley Evers Post Office.

H.R. 3839, to designate the Roy M. Wheat Post Office.

H.R. 3984, to designate the John Longo, Jr. Post Office.

H.R. 4177, to designate the Candace White U.S. Post Office.

H.R. 4190, to designate the Alvaro de Lugo U.S. Post Office.

H.R. 4191, to designate the Audrey C. Ottley U.S. Post Office.

H.R. 4301, to continue consideration of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995.

Then we will have recorded votes on those suspensions postponed until the end of legislative business. We expect to not have any votes until 5, according to my understanding. So that Members from the west coast would have the opportunity to arrive in time.

We hope to go beyond that and do some work on the National Defense Authorization Act that we have been working on this morning and this afternoon.

On Tuesday, May 24, Wednesday, May 25, and Thursday, May 26, we have the following schedule: 10:30 a.m. on Tuesday for morning business and then go in at noon on Tuesday.

We will meet at 10 a.m. on Wednesday and Thursday to consider the following bills: Continue working on the National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1995, on which we have been working for the last several days.

We will then go to H.R. 4385, National Highway System Designation Act, subject to a rule. We also hope to consider the following appropriation bills: The military construction appropriation bill, subject to a rule; the foreign operations export financing and related programs appropriations, fiscal year 1995, subject to a rule; the legislative branch appropriations bill, fiscal 1995, subject to a rule. The other two, H.R. 811 and H.R. 518, H.R. 811 being the Independent Counsel Reauthorization Act conference report, subject to a rule, and then of course if we have time we will go to the H.R. 518, California Desert Protection Act.

We will not meet on Friday, May 27, so that Members may return to their districts for the Memorial Day district work period.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman, and I would like to make the observation that the Independent Counsel Reauthorization Act is scheduled, but with no particular time. Could it be programmed for sometime in the week after we have had an opportunity to visit with the special counsel? The gentleman may recall a meeting we had with the Speaker and majority leader and the leadership on both sides in which the Speaker indicated that the majority leader and the minority leader, in company with the Speaker, would probably be meeting with the special counsel, Mr. Fiske, I gathered maybe Tuesday or Wednesday, the early part of this next week. Hopefully, it would be my preference that the consideration then of the extension of the Authorization Act be delayed until after we have had an opportunity to have that meeting.

Mr. BONIOR. I do remember the meeting, and I do remember the discussion well, and I know those requests have been made or are attempting to be made to bring people together to discuss that. I would say to my colleague that I am sure we will consider his request. It seems reasonable. I know we will not proceed on this certainly before the Senate does it. I do not know—I think they do it first, if I am not mistaken.

So I expect the timing can work out to the gentleman's satisfaction.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman.

Then, since that will be a getaway week next week before the Memorial Day recess period, how late should we be telling our Members they ought to be meeting next week?

Mr. BONIOR. Well, I think we ought to tell folks, for the week, that we are probably going to be meeting until 8 in the evening each night because we have a lot of work to do on the defense bill, especially. And if we want to get a jump start on our appropriation bills, the three that I mentioned, it is going to take a lot of time and a lot of work.

On Thursday, obviously we would like to give Members the opportunity to catch their planes. So we will do the best we can. But we are still, frankly, thinking of 6 or 7 right at this point.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the Republican leader for yielding.

The gentleman mentioned appropriation bills. We are going to be having the legislative and foreign operations bills, appropriation bills, probably coming before the Committee on Rules. But considering the complex issue of having to cut up the pie, so to speak, for the entire budget, the membership really ought to have adequate notice so that we will have time really to know what is in the 602(b) allocations process throughout the entire appropriation process. We want to be as helpful as we can. But I just hope that the gentleman would be able to assure us that if these are coming to the Committee on Rules or directly to the floor, that Members should be given adequate notice so that they will know what they are voting on.

Mr. BONIOR. We will do the best we can. The fact that these three that are being announced today, I think people are aware that these are the first three out of the box and if they have amendments, we hope to be as generous as we can. If they bring them directly to the floor, of course anything that is germane can be offered. If we end up in the Rules Committee on any one of the three, we hope to be as inclusive as we can as we proceed with the appropriations process.

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DREIER. I thank the Republican leader.

Mr. Speaker, I simply would like to inquire of my friend, again, as I asked of the chairman of the Committee on Rules yesterday: What can we anticipate on these appropriation bills coming forward, are any of them going to come directly to the floor?

Mr. BONIOR. There will be some coming directly to the floor, and I suspect that others will go up to the Rules Committee. I believe it will vary on the rule and on the amount and flexibility we have in the Rules Committee, depending on the legislation.

So we are going to try to be as inclusive as we can of Members' concerns. We are not about to close down our appropriation bills.

Mr. DREIER. So that every attempt will be made then to ensure that we do conceivably move appropriation bills under the standards rules of the House.

Mr. BONIOR. Of course.

Mr. DREIER. I thank the gentleman, and I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I also would ask unanimous consent that in my remarks I be permitted to include a schedule of the dates or the days upon which amendments have to be filed to comport with what the Committee on Rules has more or less laid down as a guideline for us in the consideration of the measures next week. I think Members ought to all be aware that there are certain cutoff periods of time. So we will put that together unless the gentleman would prefer to have it included with his discourse here. Otherwise we will include it with our remarks so that the Members would know about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the Speaker, and I thank the majority whip.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I have just been advised by staff that the Rules Committee chairman did ask for amendments on foreign operations and legislative branch appropriations.

Mr. MICHEL. If that is all included, I just wanted it for anybody reading the RECORD to know that there are terminal points by which they can submit those amendments. And if they have not gotten to it, they had better get cracking. If there is no other inquiry, I yield back the balance of my time.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, MAY 23, 1994

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 10:30 a.m. on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KREIDLER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

WHY WE MUST RENEW MOST-FAVORED-NATION TRADING STATUS WITH CHINA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I have taken this very brief time, and I appreciate the forbearance of members of the staff here who have stayed, but I want to talk about an issue that is looming, going to be confronting us in the next few weeks.

As most of my colleagues are aware, by June 3, Mr. Speaker, President Clinton has to make the decision as to whether or not he is going to renew most-favored-nation trading status with China, and this has been an ongoing ing debate. We are rapidly approaching the fifth anniversary of the tragedy of the Tiananmen Square massacre, and there is, understandably and correctly, a great deal of attention on the issue of human rights and human rights violations which have existed in China.

I think it is very important for us to recognize that there has been dramatic improvement in the human rights situation in China, and we have to look at why it is that that improvement has taken place, and I believe that every bit of empirical evidence that we have today shows that that improvement has come about because of exposure to the West by the people of China. It seems to me that, if we are going to deal with the issue of human rights in China, the most important thing that we can do is to renew most-favored-nation trading status with China and make it permanent.

Why?

Because it has been this exposure to the West, United States business investment in China, which has played a key role in improving the quality of life for people in China and at the same time strengthening ties between the United States of America and the most populous country in the world. China has nearly five times the population of the United States, between 1.2 and 1.3 billion people, and we would, if we were to revoke most-favored-nation trading status with China, not alienate China from the rest of the world. We would alienate the United States of America from the world and, most specifically, the large and very important market of the Pacific rim.

Now, as we have been looking at this debate on human rights, most of us who have been strong proponents of the MFN have had a pattern over the last several years of simply being on the defensive, trying to argue that it is very important for us to maintain this so we can improve the situation.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have come to the conclusion that it is important for us to go on the offensive on this issue because, as we look at this question, it is going to be more United States business investment in China which will continue to improve the human rights situation there.

As this debate continues, Mr. Speaker, I hope very much that the President will make the right decision. The right decision is in the name of human rights, in the name of denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula, in the name of maintaining support in the U.N. Security Council, in the name of ensuring that we slow weapons exports from China, to renew most favored-nation trading status.

I hope the President makes that decision, and if by chance there is a resolution of disagreement which is offered in this House, I hope very much that my colleagues will reject it so that we can achieve those shared goals that we have.
